Smith was not induced to make the confession; did not tell him that it would be better for him in the long run if he told all; Smith admitted that when Bertha Wade was lying in Welton's arms he used the instruments once or twice and that on looking at them he saw blood on one; he then said that "he had got her now," but then added that he would make sure and he blew some air into the womb. Immediately after this operation the girl dropped over dead. During the operation the girl complained of pain in her back; Smith told her that "that was the place where it ought to hurt."

When asked if Miss Wade got the blow when the operation was being performed; Smith said that no blow had been given her in the house; would not acknowledge occasioning the marks on the thighs; said there was another party, but would not give the name; kept saying that Cope was not so much to blame; Smith said that the burying had not been done very well; if he had had anything to do with it he would have thrown her into the mill-pond; witness said to Smith "You couldn't sleep last night," and Smith replied, "You bet I did;" witness wished to deny the truth of the impression that he had given Smith whiskey to get the confession out of him.

THE VERDICT.

CORONER FIFE addressed the jury, and took occasion to remark on the extremely orderly conduct which had characterized the large assemblage. He said that the evidence was full and settled.

The Jury were left to themselves, and after an interval of two hours and a-half returned the following verdict:—"We the undersigned jurors, empaneled to enquire as to the manner by which Alberta Wade came to her death, upon their oath present, that the said Alberta Wade came to her death by an attempt to procure abortion on her person by one David Smith, assisted by Marvin Welton and John Cope Mallory, on Friday night, the 25th May, A. D. 1877."

Smith was not presented during the investigation, he having been committed for trial by the Coroner previously. The usual formalities for the commitment of Welton were followed. After the jury had returned the verdict it was read from the Town Hall steps to a crowd of not less than a thousand people. Welton had an interview with his wife and two children, after which he was taken in a covered conveyance to Cobourg gaol.

Cope Mallory is being hotly pursued by the detectives in Michigan.

back on the resolutions of the Constantinople Conference and contend for such guarantees as will ensure the efficiency of the reforms, asking the Powers to take up the thread where it was broken by the dissolution of the Conference.

ARRIVAL OF THE CZAR AT HEADQUARTERS.

The arrival of the Czar at Ploiesti, on the 9th, was made the occasion of one of the grandest fetes on record. The scene at the railway station was indescribable. The populace and staff officers and foreign military attaches united in the welcome.

Several specials confirm the report that Bucharest is about to be proclaimed in a state of siege. The Russian police, owing to the reputation of Roumania as a gathering place of Poles and turbulent characters, deemed it necessary to take severe precautions for the Czar's safety. Besides sending a host of secret police, they demand the unlimited right of arresting suspicious individuals. Roumania refused this because it was a direct violation both of the Russo-Roumanian Convention and the constitution. The Grand Duke Nicholas manifested his displeasure by not noticing the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister when they went to meet him on his last visit to Bucharest. The Roumanian Government will probably consent to proclaim a state of siege, which would permit the exceptional measures desired. The Russians are complaining of the ill-will and dilatoriness of the Roumanians, and the latter of the offensive and almost brutal behaviour of the Russian officers.

ENGLAND'S POSITION.

The rumours that Lord Derby has notified the Czar that as soon as the Russians cross the Danube England will seize Egypt and hold her as a hostage for the safety of the Suez Canal, have sent Egyptian bonds up 5 per cent.

In London military circles there is a renewal of the uneasiness which prevailed when Russia declared war, as to the part this country will shortly be called on to take. This feeling has been strengthened by the general conviction of high military authorities that Russia will be completely successful and dictate her own terms to Turkey. At one or two regimental dinners officers of the highest rank expressed fears that England would soon be at war, and that so far, little has been done to prepare for the evil day. The belief is also growing that our Government will be left to carry out and defend its own policy; that Austria, which is only a probable ally, cannot be depended upon, and therefore it would be wiser and fairer if the Premier and Cabinet would frankly declare what they will do if the Russian troops directly threaten Constantinople, either in Europe Asia.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

A Berlin special says:—"The arrival of Sidsoulah Bay, the new Turkish ambassador to Berlin, who leaves Constantinople to-morrow, is looked forward to as an event of importance, for, I believe, the German Government will, with the concurrence of England, advise Turkey to conclude peace as soon as possible, Russia having already informed the Cabinets at London, Vienna and Berlin that she would agree to conclude peace on the basis of the protocol, accepting a concession of territory in Asia Minor instead of an indemnity.

Austria has finally commenced an earnest mobilization of her army, and the equipment of her navy, and is undoubtedly a party to a secret treaty between Germany and Russia. The same authority asserts that a serious division in the English Cabinet is reported. Lord Salisbury is opposed to warlike action. Notwithstanding her preparations, it is evident that England is not so ready for offensive operations as her War Secretary professes. The Queen's continued absence is still causing great

THE WAR NEWS.

GRAND PASHA WILL BOMBARD ODESSA.

A Correspondent of the Whitehall Review, writing from Pera, says:—"Hobart Pasha, I hear, seriously intends to bombard Odessa. He believes he can shrapnel or explode the torpedoed without very great difficulty. At any rate, he says he will try to do so. The gallant admiral, whose abilities have never been fully recognized before, is at length so highly thought of that he has received from the Sultan's own hands the commission to command both the Mediterranean and the black Sea fleets. He will now have to place the ships as he thinks best, and so time his attacks, if possible, as to command either in any great action—a task by no means so easy as it may seem to the Turks."

TURKEY.

Turkey has had a windfall of $8,600,000 in the shape of the accumulations of high generations of pilgrims have heaped up on the altar of the shrine at Mecca. His vast sum will enable the Porte to complete the equipment of its armies with modern firearms and artillery, which it as thus far lacked the means, and with the credit to obtain. The gift shows how profoundly the Mohammedan hierarchy appreciates the fact that Turkey's struggle for existence is also their own, and that the eastern extension of the Russian Empire means the certain suppression of the Mohammedan faith.

In consequence of the remonstrance of Christian dignitaries against pressing Christians to fight in the Holy Moslem war, the Porte has postponed the conscription of Christian subjects, and commenced to levy exemption money.

A special from Pera reports that Hout Pasha has captured three Greek ships which were endeavoring to break the blockade of Kertch.

REPORT OF THE TURKS—IMMENSE LOSS.

On the 4th inst., the Turks attacked the Montenegrins at Krustez. They fell into a trap and were completely defeated, leaving 3,000 dead on the field. The Montenegrins fought against enormous odds, their loss was about 500. Both sides fought with great bravery.

TURKISH VICTORIES.

The Turks defeated the Montenegrins on the 7th after a six hours' battle, capturing Kanstakh, at the entrance to the Tzuga Pass.

In an encounter between six Russian torpedo boats and some Turkish ironclads at the Sulina mouth of the Danube, the torpedo boats were beaten off, three were destroyed and some prisoners taken, none of the iron clads was injured.

RUSSIA.

An Odessa correspondent writes that there is no longer any fear there of the Turkish fleet. Confidence has been completely restored. The Russian Government has now refused to acknowledge the blockade, and proposes to resume the running of steamers between Odessa and her son, and Odessa and Nicolaieff.

Austria has finally commenced an earnest mobilization of her army, and the equipment of her navy, and is undoubtedly a party to a secret treaty between Germany and Russia. The same authority asserts that a serious division in the English Cabinet is reported. Lord Salisbury is opposed to warlike action. Notwithstanding her preparations, it is evident that England is not so ready for offensive operations as her War Secretary professes. The Queen's continued absence is still causing great dissatisfaction. Earl Grey remonstrated with her on the impolicy of her course.

LONDON, June 11.—At the banquet of the Merchant Taylor's School to-night Lord Derby and Salisbury spoke in a remarkable pacific tone.

Lord Salisbury said:—"I am far myself from sharing many of the apprehensions which I hear around me. It may be our duty in possible contingencies to put forth our strength to defend indirect interests, but caution, and extreme caution, is necessary before the Government risks wealth, prosperity, and freedom, and breaks the peace of the world, not in pursuit of real honor, but for a theory and a dream."

Lord Derby said the greatest of all British interests is the interest of peace.

ROBBERY AND MASSACRE.

The house of 159 Jewish families were pillaged by a mob at Dowbani in Roumania on Sunday the 3rd inst. Eleven were killed, twenty four wounded, and 90,000 ducats stolen. The news is confirmed that the Circassians in Thessaly pillaged the monastery of Ragane, and killed the Monks.

England's Policy Respecting the Suez Canal.

Lord Derby informs, Lord Lyons, the British ambassador at Paris, that Great Britain had declined the proposal of De Lesseps to keep open the Suez canal to all nations, and had intimated to Russia that any attempt to blockade, or otherwise interfere with the canal, or its approaches, would be regarded as a menace to India, and a grave injury to the commerce of the world, incompatible with the maintenance of the British attitude of passive neutrality. At the same time it was intimated to the Porte and Khedive that England was firmly determined not to permit the canal to be made the scene of any combat, or other warlike operations.

Russia has agreed to observe the maritime declaration of the Treaty of Paris both as regards the nations directly interested and also with reference to Spain and America. The Powers have neither asked for nor given any opinion with reference to Lord Derby's reply to Gortschakoff's circular.

THE TRAVELLERS, a company of great strength, acts upon this principle, and makes regular semi-annual statements of its condition. It is also worth while to notice that a very large and solid part of its assets consists of mortgage loans on real estate, a form of investment which, when judiciously placed, we have urged as having peculiar advantages. Out of total assets of $4,053,000 this company has over half, $2,239,000, invested in loans, protected by mortgage on property of the appraised value of $4,650,000. Not many companies can make a better showing, and very naturally, not many show a strong desire to make their real condition known."—The Public.

Vienna despatch says in military circles the opinion gains that the Russians will not cross the Danube. They expect decisive success in Asia that any condition of durable peace may be read from their effects.

RUSSIA'S PROGRAMME.

The Paris correspondent states that Mr. Schouvaloff brings to London a letter from Gortschakoff in reply to Lord by. Gortschakoff explains that Russia does not mean to interfere with any English interests. He acknowledges the international and commercial importance of the Suez Canal, and gives the positive assurances that Russia does intend in any way to touch it. Russia, he thinks herself entitled as a matter of right, to carry the war to Egypt, explains that any action in that direction has never been taken into consideration. Russia thinks that so important a political passage as the Dardanelles is always regulated by international agreement and not by one power alone. He disclaims any intention of acquiring Constantinople, though at the same time could not consent to its possession by other Christian Power. The letter goes on to say that Russia has remained to her programme in aiming solely at improving the condition of the Christians in Turkey, which can only be done by securing the Porte. Words of Approval

Next to words of approval respecting ourselves, we are always pleased to meet with such expressions of appreciation in respect to persons and institutions in which we take a lively interest, and for whom or which we have felt it our duty from time to time to say a good word. We have spoken our mind pretty freely about the Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, which is doing such a large business in this country, and of which Mr. Hanson is agent in this town. It may be that some of our readers imagine that we have allowed our partiality to this excellent company to carry us too far; but if any of them will take the trouble to read the following opinions of the press, they will probably come to a different conclusion:

The TRAVELERS continues to show the same conservative management it has always exhibited. The wisdom of its direction is in broad contrast with the recklessness which has elsewhere resulted in such disastrous failure. —Baltimore Underwriter.

The TRAVELERS passed through the recent fire that enveloped life insurance, without so much as a scorch upon its garments. It is to-day stronger than it ever was, and as its management is safe as well as enterprising, it may be depended on to increase in strength, and to continually widen its field of usefulness. —Toledo Blade.

Its able and conservative management for the thirteenth year of its existence presents a marked contrast to that which has wrecked several life companies and seriously impaired the standing of others. —The Public.

The TRAVELERS has a most honorable reputation for safe management and liberal dealing, and is able to do what it promises. —Phila. Times.

The TRAVELERS leaves nothing to be desired in the way of unequivocal contracts, low rates of premium, and prompt payment of losses, while its reputation for honest and fair dealing is second to none in the land. —St. Louis Globe.

Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.

I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—now known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome concomi-
 tants, viz: CATARRH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, NEU-RALGIA, etc., etc. Twenty-eight years experience, as a busy practitioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine
 in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints.

Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great plan, WITHOUT CHARGE, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successful treatment. Full directions for prepara-

Building Improvements.

Mr. Fletcher Hall, has added to the appearance and convenience of his residence on Bridge Street, by the addition of a cottage roof and ornamental drapery.

Teachers' Class.

A class of fifteen is in course of preparation for the teachers examination in July. Mr. Burrows continues his lectures up to that time.

Inhuman Act.

Mr. Ben Dettler a farmer living near Earnsville, had a fine horse stabbed to death on Thursday night, or Friday morning, by some unknown person. The animal was valued at $1 50.

Appointment.

Mr. Brown—Ledger Keeper of Merchants Bank left on Monday evening to fill a higher position in the Merchants Bank at Ingersoll. Master Wilkie Grange takes his place.

Removal.

Mr. A. McLeod has removed his stoves and tinware from the Paisley Block to Coxall and Paisley's old stand, Dundas st., which has been refitted and improved throughout.

No Place Like Home.

One of our best mechanics who has been on a tour through the union in search of work, says no place he has visited is better than Napane.

Conference Meeting.

The meeting of the ministers of the Montreal Conference of the Methodist Church, with which Napane is connected, will take place at Ottawa on Wednesday 20th inst.

Improper Literature.

"The Customs Department at Ottawa forbids the importation into Canada of the New York 'Police Gazette,' National Gazette and Day's Doings," scurrilous and obscene publications which should be admitted into no respectable household."

Currant Worms.

A lady informs us that sulphur is certain destruction to currant worms. It is best, applied in the morning, with a perforated duster, while the dew is yet on the bushes, or at any time it will prove its beneficial effects, and is superior to hellebore and other poisonous remedies.

Transferred.

The Rev. R. M. Pope, recently pastor of the M.E. Church, here, has been transferred to the Ontario Conference, and is stationed at Listowel. The Rev. J. S.

Repaired.

The full size plate glass in Messrs. Ferguson Bros' hardware store, which was accidentally broken, has been replaced by Mr. McGowan who is an adept at this business.

Rain at Last.

After a month's dry weather we had a refreshing rain on Saturday night and Sunday morning, and again on Tuesday. Every farmer we have since met, smiles like a peach blossom. White frost was observed by early risers on Monday but it occasioned no damage.

A Live Turk.

A descendant of the "Prophet" and a true Mussulman, passed through Napane on Monday evening's Express, on his way Westward. He was dressed in his native costume—wearing the orthodox turban, and flour-bag breeches. Through an interpreter we ascertained he was an emissary from the Sublime Porte, following up Barnum, and selling Suez Canal shares. Before his return he will probably be interviewed by John, A., or "Grip," and become an attraction to "The Greatest show on Earth."

Theatrical—Home Talent.

The public's response on last Friday night, was a fitting tribute to the efforts of our Amateur Dramatic Association, in "Never to Late to Mend" the acting, scenery and appointments, were in every respect a credit to the performers, and will ensure them a hearty welcome on the 20th inst., when they again purpose appearing before us in "Luke the Labourer" a domestic drama, in which Mr. Brink will enact the part of 'Luke' supported by the rest of the company. Picton will next be favored with a visit from our popular actors.

Personal.

At the recent Law School examinations in Toronto, Mr. Geo. T. Blackstock, formerly in Mr. Preston's office, in the Senior class, and Mr. Will. V. MacIsaac, formerly in Messrs. Cartwright & Gibson's office, in the Junior Class, have been allowed six months in addition to any time previously allowed. This reduction is only obtained by taking a high percentage of the possible marks. The first named gentleman took 80 per cent., and the latter 75 per cent.

Business Change.

Mr. John Bowey has secured the Steamboat Landing formerly owned by the Messrs. Downey at the foot of Robert street. He will hereafter, in connection with his brewery, act as wharfinger, and has already made several improvements, and levelled the approaching roadway, making it more convenient and easier of access. This is the only landing in use at present. Mr. Bowey deserves well of the public, and his efforts to please should not be forgotten.

The North-West Free Lecture.

In view of the present flow of emigration to the great North-West, nothing can be more opportune than information from one who speaks from actual experience. Prof. Macoun of Belleville, will deliver a lecture in the Town Hall to-night. He will give an account of his journey across the continent with Sandford Fleming in 1872, also the resources and future prospects of British Columbia and Manitoba, including anecdotes and incidents of travel, with valuable information for intending settlers, all of which will certainly interest the most casual listener. Lecture commences at 8.—Free.

"Honest Sam"

From the Education Department asking replies to certain questions regarding the value and benefit of prizes and the Depository—Answered.

REPORTS.

The teacher's reports for May, were received and adopted.

The Special Committee on teachers reported in favour of the discontinuance of the Centre Ward school, and the removal of one of the teachers to the West Ward school, and the division of Miss Aylsworth's room to accommodate her. It was thought that the pupils could be provided for, and a saving of $400 would be effected.

Dr. Rutan, in reply to a question, said that the certificate of one of the teachers in the Centre Ward would expire in July and she could not teach any longer.

Report received and adopted.

THE ROBLIN MANSION.

Dr. Rutan said that the necessity of increased school accommodation had been manifest for some time, and Mr. Burrows, Mr. Matheson, Mr. Chipman, himself and others had examined the residence of the late David Roblin, and found that at small expense it could be admirably fitted up for a high school. It was about as convenient as most schools. It could be got for about one quarter its original cost, and at about one quarter the cost of a new school building. There was no prettier spot in the Dominion for a school. It had also the advantage of having a teacher's residence attached, which would be worth $200 per year. The saving would be about $400, or the interest on the investment. Mr. Reave had been understood to say it would be sold for $3,000. There were six acres of ground attached, and a stone barn which would make a fine gymnasium. If we did not purchase it the model school for the county, which received government and county aid, would be located in Newburgh or Bath. He moved: "That a committee be appointed, composed of the chairman, Messrs. Davis, R. McCay and the mover, to confer with the proper authorities with the view of purchasing the dwelling and lands attached, being part of the Estate of the late David Roblin, in Napane, said property to be used as a Grammar (High) school building, and that the chairman be authorized to report at next meeting of this Board, and to call a special meeting for that purpose."

Mr. Jas. Perry seconded the motion.

Mr. Lane asked the purpose of the Model School, and if municipalities had the right to locate it.

Mr. Matheson, being so requested, explained that the Model Schools were for the training of teachers, each of whom had to attend and pass an examination before receiving a certificate. The government located them, and had done so at Belleville and Kingston, and would soon require to do so in this county, but Napane had no place and Newburgh and Bath had, so that if the purchase spoken of were not made it was likely that the school would be lost with all its advantages.

Motion carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Lane, in answer to a question, said that the basement of the West Ward school would be leased this week.

The Chairman said that the vulgarity and obscenity of the Janitor's family at the East Ward school should not be tolerated.

Mr. C. B. Perry said he intended to take measures to stop it, and if necessary the Janitor should be dismissed.

The following accounts were passed: Henry & Bro., stationary, $20.42; Rent of Centre school 3 months, $30; J. McCabe, order of T. Pearson, $3.00; J. McCay, soap and brooms, $1.00; K. Downey & Bro., coal, $24.50.

SCHOOL INSPECTORS' REPORT.

To the County Council of Lennox and Addington.

GENTLEMEN,—In addition to the detailed statement appended for each municipality burden of education it is folly to look efficient schools in these weak sections. Our County Teachers' Association is in a vigorous state, and its meetings which have been largely attended, been the means of disseminating to our teachers a knowledge of the methods of teaching and school management. Towards the end of last year were honored by a visit from the Minister of Education, whose kind words of encouragement and sympathy did to stimulate our teachers in their work. During the year I made 205 visits to the schools, this, with the examination of teachers, answering correspondence, apportioning school moneys, preparing reports, attending Teachers' Institute, &c., furnishes evidence that the office of Inspector of Schools is not by means a sinecure.

In conclusion permit me to say considering the many obstacles in the way of our educational advancement, is reason for congratulation on the progress we have made.

Your obedient servant,
F. BURROWS, Co. Insp.
Napane, June 13th, 1877.

COUNTY COURT AND QUARTER SESSIONS.

The summer session of the County Court of the County of Lennox and Addington opened on Tuesday afternoon for his honor Judge Wilkinson.

GRAND JURY.

Geo. D. Hawley, Foreman, Jose Allison, John Allen, Daniel A. Burr, Saml. Bell, Stover Clark, Thos. C. J. Carlette, Chas. Drury, W. Bennee, John R. Dollar, M. B. H. C. W. Huffman, Tilliston Irish, Pe R. Miller, Geo. Mills, William N. Walker Palmer, Albert Parks, J. Rutan, Foran Storms, John Sui B. Vanslyck, John C. Mills.

There being no criminals the following the time honored custom sent the Judge with a pair of kid gloves.

THE JUDGE'S ADDRESS.

His honor complimented the Jury, and the people generally, of freedom of the County of Lennox and Addington from crime, there not being a single prisoner in the gaol nor on bail, consequently there was no business whatever for the Grand Jury. He said that during the past year there only been three crimes committed in the County, and the present was the sitting of the County Court, in there had been no business whatever for the Grand Jury, except to examine the gaol and make their report, a session of events which he thought very highly for the morals of the County. The Grand Jury was then directed to proceed with their work.

LIST OF CASES.

The following is the list of civil cases disposed of by the Court.

Burrett vs. B. and F. Mutual Insurance Co.—Action on a Bill of exchange for $300 accepted by defendant Verdict for plaintiff for $200. For plaintiff, Heroche & Madden; for defendant, Murray, Barnock, and Lyon.

Joy vs. Carscallan.—Action on a promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff $103.25. For plaintiff, E. B. Stom; defendant, D. H. Preston.

McGuin vs. Just, et al.—Action promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff $111.88. For plaintiff, Reeve & Mc for defendants, Depoche & Madden Merchants Bankers, Babcock, and on two promissory notes. Verdict for plaintiff for $149.65. For plaintiff, Conrad and Paisley's old stand, Dundas st., which has been refitted and improved throughout.

No Place Like Home.

One of our best mechanics who has been on a tour through the union in search of work, says no place he has visited is better than Napanee.

Conference Meeting.

The meeting of the ministers of the Montreal Conference of the Methodist Church, with which Napanee is connected, will take place at Ottawa on Wednesday 20th inst.

Improper Literature.

"The Customs Department at Ottawa forbids the importation into Canada of the New York 'Police Gazette,' National Gazette and Day's Doings," scurrilous and obscene publications which should be admitted into no respectable household."

Current Worms.

A lady informs us that sulphur is certain destruction to current worms. It is best, applied in the morning, with a perforated duster, while the dew is yet on the bushes, or at any time it will prove the beneficial effects, and is superior to daffodil and other poisonous remedies.

Transferred.

The Rev. R. M. Pope, recently pastor of the M. E. Church, here, has been transferred to the Ontario Conference, and is stationed at Listowel. The Rev. J. S. Bell has been placed in charge in Demarestville.

"Dominion Day."

Get ready your lunch baskets, and overhaul your fishing tackle. Know ye, that Mayor Williams, backed by a requisition from influential citizens, has proclaimed Monday the 2nd of July as a public holiday. All patriotic citizens will govern themselves accordingly.

Important Decision.

In the adjourned case—License Inspector vs. Grange Bros. and Dettlor and Scott, charged with selling liquor for other than strictly medicinal purposes. Judgement was given on the 7th inst., by the Mayor and H. T. Forward. Both cases being dismissed and the commissioners to pay the costs.

Base Ball—Getting Restless.

We hear the Clippers of Belleville—who were expected here on the 4th—have gone into winter quarters. Our Leafs are, accordingly, spoiling for a fight. We suggest that they get up a match with our citizens, and give the town an opportunity of seeing their skill, or perhaps, they could get beaten in Newburgh, which is only seven miles away, and would be very convenient in case of a home run.

Teachers' Convention.

A meeting of the Lennox and Addington Teachers' Association, will be held in the Academy, Napanee, (to-morrow) Saturday, 16th inst., commencing at 10 A. M. Prof. Macoun of the Albert College Belleville, will lecture on Botany. The Professor was Government Botanist with Sandford Fleming's Exploring Expedition to the Pacific—so well described in "From Ocean to Ocean." He has been over the "Rockies," and is prepared to analyze all specimens brought before him, any one possessing a rare plant which the Professor has not seen, can test the matter at the Academy to-morrow. There will also be addresses on the Kindergarten system, Penmanship, and other subjects interesting to Teachers, Students, and the Public.

Important for Advertisers.

George P. Rowell & Co., deserve the best thanks of the advertising community for their efforts to prevent advertisers from being imposed on by unscrupulous publishers. Every honest publisher will also thank them for the aid they have afforded them in maintaining their competition for business by fair means, against the fraudulent practices of dishonest rivals. Messrs. Rowell & Co.,

months in addition to any time previously allowed. This reduction is only obtained by taking a high percentage of the possible marks. The first named gentleman took 80 per cent., and the latter 75 per cent.

Business Change.

Mr. John Bowey has secured the Steamboat Landing formerly owned by the Messrs. Downey at the foot of Robert street. He will hereafter, in connection with his brewery, act as wharfinger, and has already made several improvements, and levelled the approaching roadway, making it more convenient and easier of access. This is the only landing in use at present. Mr. Bowey deserves well of the public, and his efforts to please should not be forgotten.

The North-West Free Lecture.

In view of the present flow of emigration to the great North-West, nothing can be more opportune than information from one who speaks from actual experience. Prof. Macoun of Belleville, will deliver a lecture in the Town Hall to-night. He will give an account of his journey across the continent with Sandford Fleming in 1872, also the resources and future prospects of British Columbia and Manitoba, including anecdotes and incidents of travel, with valuable information for intending settlers, all of which will certainly interest the most casual listener. Lecture commences at 8.—Free.

"Honest Sam."

A large and orderly crowd was recently inspecting a petrified salmon-trout conspicuously hanging in front of the Fish and Fruit Market, Sam stood—smiling as usual in the doorway, at last he let them into the secret, saying it was nothing but an imitation, and the handiwork of Mr. Frank Hamilton, a rising and young artist, whose skill as a wood carver and ornament is well known. The crowd admitted the sell, and Sam treated to peanuts and taffy. Our friend handles 2,000 weight of fish weekly, received packed in ice fresh from the fishing grounds. Yesterday this go-ahead genius was selling strawberries ahead of all competitors.

Prentice Boys' Grand Lodge.

The Grand Lodge of Ontario of the Prentice Boys, met at Belleville on the 12th inst. The delegates from this vicinity were: Napanee, W. D. Madden, I. Clark, N. F. Paisley; Colebrook, J. Storms; Tamworth, Hazzard, F. Busby; Clarks Mills, G. Reilly;—Robison. Mr. W. D. Madden was elected Grand Master, and Mr. N. F. Paisley Director of Ceremonies. About 40 delegates from different parts of the County were present. A large amount of important business affecting the Order was transacted, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

W. D. Madden, Grand Master, Napanee. Thos. Wilson, Sec. Dep. G. M., Toronto. W. J. Howell, J. C. M., Tamworth. C. A. Pettit, Grand Secretary, Belleville. J. Melroy, Grand Treasurer, Kingston. P. J. Howell, G. Chaplain, Amherst Island. R. Smith, Grand Lecturer, Toronto. F. C. Busby, G. Asst., Tamworth. N. F. Paisley, G. Dir. of Cer., Napanee.

A resolution was passed, thanking the Past Officers for their services during the year. The next meeting of the Grand Lodge will be held at St. Catharines.

L. & A. Rifle Association.

At the annual general meeting of the L. & A. Rifle Association, held at Bath on the 6th inst., the following gentlemen were elected officers of the association for the coming year:—

PATRON.
Hon. R. J. Cartwright, M. P., Finance Minister.
PRESIDENT.
Lt. Col. Fairfield, 15th Batt.
VICE-PRESIDENTS.
1st, J. J. Watson, Esq.
2nd, Capt. E. Hooper, N. B. G. Artillery.
TREASURER.
Capt. A. P. Booth.
SECRETARY.
T. Keith Ross, M. D., Surgeon, 15th Regt.
COUNCIL.
Major Patterson, 15th Batt.
Lt. Col. Chas. Fraser, R. M.
Major Howard Ritchie, R. M.

Mr. Jas. Perry seconded the motion. Mr. Lane asked the purpose of the Model School, and if municipalities had the right to locate it.

Mr. Matheson, being so requested, explained that the Model Schools were for the training of teachers, each of whom had to attend and pass an examination before receiving a certificate. The government located them, and had done so at Belleville and Kingston, and would soon require to do so in this county, but Napanee had no place and Newburgh and Bath had, so that if the purchase spoken of were not made it was likely that the school would be lost with all its advantages.

Motion carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Lane, in answer to a question, said that the basement of the West Ward school would be cleaned this week.

The Chairman said that the vulgarity and obscenity of the Janitor's family at the East Ward school should not be tolerated.

Mr. C. B. Perry said he intended to take measures to stop it, and if necessary the Janitor should be dismissed.

The following accounts were passed: Henry & Bro., stationary, $20.42; Rent of Centre school 3 months, $30; J. McCabe, order of T. Pearson, $3.00; J. McCay, soap and brooms, $1.00; R. Downey & Bro., coal, $24.50.

SCHOOL INSPECTORS' REPORT.

To the County Council of Lennox and Addington:

GENTLEMEN,—In addition to the detailed statement appended for each municipality, I beg respectfully to submit the following general remarks and statistics regarding the schools of this County for 1876:—

Total number of schools, 112; total amount raised for school purposes during the year was $39,658. Of this amount $7,831 consisted of Legislative grant and interest of invested moneys, leaving $31,827 from direct tax; $26,726 went for teachers' salaries, a slight increase over preceding year; $5,188 for building and repairs, and $3,824 for other expenses.

Total number of teachers, 119 (85 male and 34 females). Of these two held First-class Provincial Certificates; nine Second-class Provincial; nine First-class from Old Board; 67 Third-class from New Board, and 15 permits—the last mentioned being held chiefly by teachers in the rear townships. The religious persuasions of the teachers were as follows: 70 Methodists; 19 Presbyterians; 17 Episcopalians; 12 Roman Catholics; and 1 Baptist. The highest salary paid a male teacher was $600, and the lowest $216. The highest paid a female teacher was $400 and the lowest $144. The average salary of male teachers was $354; $38 less than the preceding year. This decrease is due to a considerable influx of young teachers and the hard times. The average salary of female teachers was $208—$1 less than preceding year. The total amount paid teachers was slightly in excess of preceding year; 6,714 pupils (3,183 boys and 3,531 girls) were enrolled during the year. The average attendance for the first half-year was 2871, and for second half-year 2607. The attendance would have been much greater only for the prevalence of diphtheria, on account of which some of the schools were closed for a considerable time, and the attendance at others greatly reduced. The pupils were classified as follows: 1,998 in first book, 1,512 in 2nd, 2,329 in 3rd 863 in 4th, and 12 in 5th. Nearly all were in reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography. 2,236 in drawing, 1,153 in vocal music, 2,940 in grammar and composition, 1,117 in chemistry and botany, 285 in Canadian History, 487 in English History, 114 in Natural History, 19 in Human Physiology, 20 in Natural Philosophy, 38 in Algebra, 25 in Geometry, 14 in 101 schools the form of prayer prescribed for opening and closing is used, and in 77 schools the Ten Commandments are taught weekly. Of the school-houses, 18 were brick, 7 stone, 76 frame and 11 log—total 112. Of these 46 have been erected since I became Inspector. The total estimated value of school property was $80,000. This estimate is too low. The schools are tolerably well

LIST OF CASES.

The following is the list of civil cases disposed of by the Court.

Burrett vs. B. and F. Mutual Fire Insurance Co.—Action on a Bill of Exchange for $200 accepted by defendant Verdict for plaintiff for $200. For plaintiff, Deroche & Madden; for defendant Murray, Burnock, and Lyon.

Joy vs. Carscallen.—Action on a promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff $103.25. For plaintiff, E. B. Stone; defendant, D. H. Preston.

McGuin vs. Just, et al.—Action on promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff $111.88. For plaintiff, Reeve & Mord for defendants, Deroche & Madden.

Merchants Bank vs. Babcock.—Action on two promissory notes. Verdict for plaintiff for $149.65. For plaintiff, Reeve & Morden; for defendant, D. H. Preston.

Cummings vs. Spencer.—This was action brought by Wellington Cummins against Horace Spencer, both of Township of Abinger, for a number saw logs delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant under an agreement between the parties. The question was whether the logs were as good as the agreement specified. Verdict for plaintiff $60. For plaintiff, Reeve & Morden; for defendant, Deroche & Madden.

ADOLPHUSTOWN.

(For the Express.)

A party of ladies and gentlemen, composed of Messrs. C. B. and Jost Allison and wives, Cyrus Roblin a wife, Nelson Mallory and wife, Mrs. I. and Stephen Roblin—not forgetting my correspondent—all of whom, on Saturday last, formed a picnic at the residence of Mr. Nelson Mallory, who after spending a most enjoyable time, then went down to the fishing ground Thompson's Point, but as the fishermen had left for their homes a few venturesome ones, not to be disappointed, proposed to throw the seine, which resulted in making a splendid haul, catching one of the largest and finest sturgeons ever seen in this section, weighing one hundred and ten pounds. The party returned home well pleased with their success as fishermen, but were caught in a rain, getting a thorough wetting, which is part of fisherman's luck.

TAMWORTH.

(From our Special)

Tamworth is a lively place, and it seems that it has come to be holy as well. A man told me lately that it appeared on Sunday when he visited Tamworth. Why says I? "Because of the Dun Bill, says he." He could not get a gl there for money. But I have heard that some were not strictly obedient to Law. I am told that Mr. Whee observed the "Dunkin'" to the left. Therefore he should be greatly patronized by the Dunkin' friends, and I hope that a great number of those contemplated upon doing so, on the coming 12th will for them. He has everything convenient for their comforts.

Important for Advertisers.

George P. Rowell & Co., deserve the best thanks of the advertising community for their efforts to prevent advertisers from being imposed on by unscrupulous publishers. Every honest publisher will also thank them for the aid they have afforded them in maintaining their competition for business by fair means, against the fraudulent practices of dishonest rivals. Messrs. Rowell & Co., alone of Newspaper Directory publishers, have had the courage to undertake the task of discriminating among the statements of newspapers, and to face the hostility which such a course was sure to excite among those who profited by misrepresentation. Notwithstanding the "crushing" articles that from time to time have been hurled at them, sometimes by parties who ought to have known better, they have persevered in their course, and they have had their reward. Their publication has taken the first place as the standard authority among American Newspaper Directories, and a reference book for every large advertiser and advertising agency in this country.—Jersey City Journal, May 22, 1877.

Farming Prospects.

Through the kindness of Mr. A. H. Allison, M. Tel. Co., we have been favoured with a few notes taken during a visit to our farming community. He has shown us a sample of barley, artly headed out, taken from the farm of Mr. C. R. Allison, in the 2nd con. of South Fredericksburgh, Parma. It is fully three feet high, presenting a fresh and healthy state of growth, and was by far the best he saw in any part of the township, front and rear. The present appearance indicates that barley will not show much over half a crop, except on low land, where it looks very favourable. Wheat only middling. Peas and Oats not extra. Rye, good and very stout on the ground, some measured eight feet in height, on the farm of Cyrus Roblin, other fields nearly, or quite as good. The dry weather has affected grain in the front of the township, much more than in the centre and rear. Hay will scarcely average half a crop. Corn and other produce vary backward. The wire worm has done considerable damage to grain, and desert spots are frequently noticed. A heavy rain on Saturday and Sunday morning greatly improved the appearance of everything. The fruit crop is a total failure.

Yachting Notes.

The Amorette has been sold to Master Will Huff who had her hauled out, thoroughly repaired, and painted white, she was launched last week and will be rigged out in a few days ready for sailing. The Venus was docked last Monday night, across the river opposite Herring's foundry, where she will receive a coat of paint and have her center-board box caulked. The Brown Duck, built and owned by Mr. George Humphrey, slipped her cable during the gale of Sunday morning, and went ashore below Luke's Point. No lives lost. The Pioneer returned on Monday of last week, from her Belleville cruise, a slipper, which has replaced her center-board, is found to be a great improvement. Being re-painted, and kept in admirable trim, she presents a neat and tidy appearance. Her speed this season will doubtless fulfill expectations.

Of the school-houses, 18 were brick, 7 stone, 76 frame and 11 log—total 112. Of these 46 have been erected since I became Inspector. The total estimated value of school property was $80,000. This estimate is too low. The schools are tolerably well supplied with the apparatus and appliances necessary for their efficiency—there being 647 maps, 93 globes, 78 sets of object and table lessons, and 24 libraries containing 1701 volumes. It is to be regretted that more of our Trustees do not avail themselves of the great facilities afforded by the Education Department for supplying the schools with libraries. Scores of our youth are in a state of mental starvation, while the rich stores of literature are almost within their reach. Of many it may be said in the language of Gray:—

"But knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich in the spoils of time did never unroll.
Chill penury repressed their noble mirth,
And froze the genial current of the soul."

Comparatively few people have either the means or the disposition to supply their homes with that sort of reading matter calculated to supplement the Public School course, but with the assistance of the Education Department, every section might have at a trifling cost a free public library of entertaining and instructive books that would cultivate a taste for useful reading, and in this way save our youth from the pernicious effects of that vile literature which is far too abundant, and to which access is so readily found. The Township Council of Amherst Island, by furnishing each of the schools of the Township with an excellent library, has set an example, which, I trust, will be followed by other Township Councils of this County. With regard to the condition of our schools, I am glad to say that many of them show marked indications of progress; others are in a low state, owing to the many adverse elements against which they have to contend. Among the retarding causes, I might mention the employment of very young and unskilled teachers, irregular attendance, and the frequent changing of teachers. A good many sections, especially in the northern portion of the County, are too poor to incur the expense necessary to secure good schools, and until something is done to equalize more the

Mr. EXPRESS, I did not see anything in your last, from Gobeleveld. What could be the reason? Well, perhaps he is gone up West, where many are going, (some for pleasure, and others for something else) in these days. Then please to allow me to take his stand for this time, I have not heard of anything very strange taking place about Beaver Lake of late.

I understand it to be a general complaint here, as in many other places that the worms are working destructively both in the field and the garden. Garden produce suffers the most from these pests, they love darkness rather than light, therein they perform their evil deeds. I find that the potato bugs are very numerous around here. It seems as if they were determined to conquer this summer, they have collected their forces together, a mortal war has been declared, and a great slaughter is contemplated, especially if the Paris great ammunition will not fail. It is to be hoped that the Magazines will be well stored, ready for the conflict.

It is evident that the people around here have been doing their road work for this year. The travelling is greatly improved. But I understand that there is great dissatisfaction among the people, their tasks were over double this year, to what they were last. They would like some of their leading men to give the

REPORTS.

The teacher's reports for May, were received and adopted.

The Special Committee on teachers reported in favour of the discontinuance of the Centre Ward school, and the removal of one of the teachers to the West Ward school, and the division of Miss Aylsworth's room to accommodate her. It was thought that the pupils could be provided for, and a saving of $400 would be effected.

Dr. Rutan, in reply to a question, said that the certificate of one of the teachers in the Centre Ward would expire in July and she could not teach any longer.

Report received and adopted.

THE ROBLIN MANSION.

Dr. Rutan said that the necessity of increased school accommodation had been manifest for some time, and Mr. Burrows, Mr. Matheson, Mr. Chipman, himself and others had examined the residence of the late David Roblin, and found that at small expense it could be admirably fitted up for a high school. It was about as convenient as most schools. It could be got for about one quarter its original cost, and at about one quarter the cost of a new school building. There was no prettier spot in the Dominion for a school. It had also the advantage of having a teacher's residence attached, which would be worth $200 per year. The saying would be about $400, or the interest on the investment. Mr. Reave had been understood to say it would be sold for $3,000. There were six acres of ground attached, and a stone barn which would make a fine gymnasium. If we did not purchase it the model school for the county, which received government and county aid, would be located in Newburgh or Bath. He moved: "That a committee be appointed, composed of the chairman, Messrs. Davis, R. McCay and the mover, to confer with the proper authorities with the view of purchasing the dwelling and lands attached, being part of the Estate of the late David Roblin, in Napanee, said property to be used as a Grammar (High) school building, and that the chairman be authorized to report at next meeting of this Board, and to call a special meeting for that purpose."

Mr. Jas. Perry seconded the motion. Mr. Lane asked the purpose of the Model School, and if municipalities had the right to locate it.

Mr. Matheson, being so requested, explained that the Model Schools were for the training of teachers, each of whom had to attend and pass an examination before receiving a certificate. The government located them, and had done so at Belleville and Kingston, and would soon require to do so in this county, but Napanee had no place and Newburgh and Bath had, so that if the purchase spoken of were not made it was likely that the school would be lost with all its advantages.

Motion carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Lane, in answer to a question, said that the basement of the West Ward school would be cleaned this week.

The Chairman said that the vulgarity and obscenity of the Janitor's family at the East Ward school should not be tolerated.

Mr. C. B. Perry said he intended to take measures to stop it, and if necessary the Janitor should be dismissed.

The following accounts were passed: Henry & Bro., stationary, $20.42; Rent of Centre school 3 months, $30; J. McCabe, order of T. Pearson, $3.00; J. McCay, soap and brooms, $1.00; R. Downey & Bro., coal, $24.50.

Board adjourned.

SCHOOL INSPECTOR'S REPORT.

To the County Council of Lennox and Addington:

GENTLEMEN,—In addition to the detailed statement appended for each municipality, I beg respectfully to submit the following general remarks and statistics regarding the schools of this County for 1876:—

Total number of schools, 112; total amount raised for school purposes during burden of education it is folly to look for efficient schools in these weak sections. Our County Teachers' Association is still in a vigorous state, and its meetings, which have been largely attended, have been the means of disseminating among our teachers a knowledge of correct methods of teaching and school management. Towards the end of last year we were honored by a visit from the Minister of Education, whose kind words of encouragement and sympathy did much to stimulate our teachers in their noble work. During the year I made 205 visits to the schools, this with the examination of teachers, answering correspondents, apportioning school moneys, preparing reports, attending Teachers' Institutes, &c., furnishes evidence that the office of an Inspector of Schools is not by any means a sinecure.

In conclusion permit me to say that considering the many obstacles in the way of our educational advancement, there is reason for congratulation on the progress we have made.

Your obedient servant,

F. BURROWS, Co. Inspector.

COUNTY COURT AND QARTER SESSIONS

The summer session of the County Court of the County of Lennox and Addington opened on Tuesday afternoon before his honor Judge Wilkison.

GRAND JURY.

Geo. D. Hawley, Foreman, Joseph B. Allison, John Allen, Daniel A. Burdette, Saml. Bell, Stover Clark, Thos. Close, C. J. Curlette, Chas. Drury, William Bennee, John R. Dollar, M. B. Hawley, C. W. Huffman, Tiltison Irish, Peter E. R. Miller, Geo. Mills, William Nugent, Walter Palmer, Albert Parks, Elisha Rutan, Forman Storms, John Smith, B. B. Vanslyck, John C. Mills.

There being no criminals the sheriff, following the time honored custom, presented the Judge with a pair of white kid gloves.

THE JUDGE'S ADDRESS.

His honor complimented the Grand Jury, and the people generally, on the freedom of the County of Lennox and Addington from crime, there not being a single prisoner in the gaol nor out on bail, consequently there was no business whatever for the Grand Jury. He stated that during the past year there had only been three crimes committed in this County, and the present was the fifth sitting of the County Court, in which there had been no business whatever for the Grand Jury, except to examine the gaol and make their report, a succession of events which he thought spoke very highly for the morals of the County.

The Grand Jury was then directed to proceed with their work.

LIST OF CASES.

The following is the list of civil cases disposed of by the Court.

Burgett vs. B. and F. Mutual Fire Insurance Co.—Action on a Bill of Exchange for $300 accepted by defendants. Verdict for plaintiff for $200. For plaintiff, Deroche & Madden; for defendants, Murray, Bernack, and Lyon.

Joy vs. Garscallen.—Action on a promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff for $103.25. For plaintiff, E. B. Stone; for defendant, D. H. Preston.

McGuin vs. Just, et al.—Action on a promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff for $111.88. For plaintiff, Reeve & Morden; for defendants, Deroche & Madden.

Merchants Bank vs. Babcock.—Action on two promissory notes. Verdict for plaintiff for $149.63. For plaintiff, Reeve & Morden; for defendant, D. H. Preston.

Cummings vs. Spencer.—This was an action brought by Wellington Cummings against Horace Spencer, both of the Township of Abinger, for a number of reason for this. Has it come to them like the children of Israel in Egypt, "all their service within they made them serve with rigour." Beautiful rain visited this part on the 9th ult., which made the hearts of the people to rejoice. Very windy on the 10th. Calm, but a little cool to day the 11th. Good bye at present Mr. Express, I hope that Gohebydd will be up to his post next time.

SUPERSTITION

A panacea, or "cure all" is one of the myths of the age of superstition. Dr. B. V. Pierce does not recommend any one or even his whole list of standard remedies as adequate to cure every disease. For severe lingering coughs, bronchial, throat, and chronic lung diseases, he believes his Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed, but it will not cure you if your lungs are half wasted by consumption. The Discovery not only exercises a potent influence over pulmonary affections, by reason of its pectoral properties, but possesses also the most valuable alternative, or blood-cleansing properties, and is therefore a sovereign remedy in blood and skin affections. But while it will cure scrofulous and other ulcers or sores, blotches, pimples, and eruptions, it will not cure cancer, nor does its manufacturer claim any such merit for it as is done by proprietors of other blood-cleansing medicines, who dishonestly try to deceive the afflicted into the belief that their preparations will accomplish impossibilities. By reason of its real intrinsic merit it has a sale surpassing that of any other blood and cough medicine.

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual droppings in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which ceased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY SNIDER.

Tamworth is a lively place, and it seems that it has come to be holy as well. A man told me lately that it appeared like Sunday when he visited Tamworth. Why says I? "Because of the Dunkin Bill, says he." He found not get a glass there for money. But I have heard that some were not strictly obedient to the Law. I am told that Mr. Wheeler, observed the "Dunkin" to the letter. Therefore he should be greatly patronized by the Dunkin friends, and I heard that a great number of those contemplated upon doing so, on the coming 12th. Well for them. He has everything convenient, for their comforts.

Mr. Harkumers, Mr. Blacks, and Mr. Fuller's new buildings have added greatly to the magnificence of our town. Some change has taken place here lately, Mr. Martin Mechanic sold out to Mr. Carscallen, and while on his Western tour, he bought a place. All for the West.

the County Council of Lennox and Addington:

GENTLEMEN.—In addition to the detailed statement appended for each municipality, I beg respectfully to submit the following general remarks and statistics regarding the schools of this County for 76:—

Total number of schools, 112; total amount raised for school purposes during year was $39,658. Of this amount $34 consisted of Legislative grant, and interest of invested moneys, leaving $5,714 from direct tax; $26,726 went for salaries, a slight increase over $25,188 for building and heating year; $3,824 for other expenses.

Total number of teachers, 119 (35 male, 84 females). Of these two held First-class Provincial Certificates; nine Second-class Provincial; nine First-class from Board; 67 Third-class from New and 15 permits—the last mentioned being held chiefly by teachers in the rural townships. The religious persuasions of the teachers were as follows: 70 Catholics; 19 Presbyterians; 17 Episcopalians; 12 Roman Catholics; and 1 Baptist. The highest salary paid a male teacher was $600, and the lowest $216.

The highest paid a female teacher was $30 and the lowest $144. The average salary of male teachers was $354; $38 less than the preceding year. This decrease is due to a considerable influx of young teachers and the hard times. The average salary of female teachers was $28—$4 less than preceding year. The total amount paid teachers was slightly in excess of preceding year; 6,714 less (3183 boys and 3231 girls) were enrolled during the year. The average attendance for the first half-year was 71, and for second half-year 2607. The attendance would have been much greater only for the prevalence of diphtheria, account of which some of the schools were closed for a considerable time, and attendance at others greatly reduced.

The pupils were classified as follows: 38 in first book, 1512 in 2nd, 2329 in 1863 in 4th, and 12 in 5th. Nearly equal in reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography. 2236 in drawing, 1153 vocal music, 2940 in grammar and composition, 117 in chemistry and botany, 5 in Canadian History, 487 in English story, 114 in Natural History, 19 in human Physiology, 20 in Natural Philosophy, 58 in Algebra, 25 in Geometry, 101 schools the form of prayer prepared for opening and closing is used, 6 in 77 schools the Ten Commandments are taught weekly. Of the school-uses, 18 were brick, 7 stone, 76 frame and 11 log—total 112. Of these 46 have been erected since I became Inspector. The total estimated value of school property was $80,000. This estimate is too low. The schools are tolerably well supplied with the apparatus and appliances necessary for their efficiency—there being 645 maps, 93 globes, 78 sets of text and table lessons, and 24 libraries containing 1701 volumes. It is to be regretted that more of our Trustees do not avail themselves of the great facilities offered by the Education Department in supplying the schools with libraries. Some of our youth are in a state of mental starvation, while the rich stores of literature are almost within their reach. Many it may be said in the language of Gray:—

The highest salary paid a male teacher was $600, and the lowest $216. The highest paid a female teacher was $400 and the lowest $144. The average salary of male teachers was $354; $338 less than the preceding year. This decrease is due to a considerable influx of young teachers and the hard times. The average salary of female teachers was $208—$1 less than preceding year. The total amount paid teachers was slightly in excess of preceding year; 6,714 pupils (3,483 boys and 3,231 girls) were enrolled during the year. The average attendance for the first half-year was 2871, and for second half-year 2607. The attendance would have been much greater but for the prevalence of diphtheria, on account of which some of the schools were closed for a considerable time, and the attendance at others greatly reduced. This estimate is too low. The schools are tolerably well supplied with the apparatus and appliances necessary for their efficiency—there being 645 maps, 93 globes, 78 sets of object and table lessons, and 24 libraries containing 1701 volumes. It is to be regretted that more of our Trustees do not avail themselves of the great facilities afforded by the Education Department for supplying the schools with libraries. Scores of our youth are in a state of mental starvation, while the rich stores of literature are almost within their reach. Of many it may be said in the language of Gray—

"But knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich in the spoils of time did never unfold.
Chill poverty represses their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of the soul."

Comparatively few people have either the means or the disposition to supply their homes with that sort of reading matter calculated to supplement the Public School course, but with the assistance of the Education Department, every section might have at a trifling cost a free public library of entertaining and instructive books that would cultivate a taste for useful reading, and in this way save our youth from the pernicious effects of that vile literature which is far too abundant, and to which access is so readily found. The Township Council of Amherst Island, by furnishing each of the schools of the Township with an excellent library, has set an example, which, I trust, will be followed by other Township Councils of this County. With regard to the condition of our schools, I am glad to say that many of them show marked indications of progress; others are in a low state, owing to the many adverse elements against which they have to contend. Among the retarding causes, I might mention the employment of very young and unskilled teachers, irregular attendance, and the frequent changing of teachers. A good many sections, especially in the northern portion of the County, are too poor to incur the expense necessary to secure good schools, and until something is done to equalize more the

A party of ladies and gentlemen, composed of Messrs. C. R. and Joseph Allison and wives, Cyris Roblin and wife, Nelson Mallory and wife, Mrs. Box and Stephen Roblin—not forgetting your correspondent—all of whom, on Saturday last, formed a picnic at the residence of Mr. Nelson Mallory, where after spending a most enjoyable time, they went down to the fishing ground at Thompson's Point, but as the fishermen had left for their homes a few venture-some ones, not to be disappointed, proposed to throw the seine, which resulted in making a splendid haul, catching one of the largest and finest sturgeons ever seen in this section, weighing one hundred and ten pounds. The party returned home well pleased with their success as fishermen, but were caught in the rain, getting a thorough wetting, which is part of fishermen's luck.

TAMWORTH.

Tamworth is a lively place, and it seems that it has come to be holy as well. A man told me lately that it appeared like Sunday when he visited Tamworth. Why says I? "Because of the Dunkin Bill," says he. He could not get a glass there for money. But I have heard that some were not strictly obedient to the Law. I am told that Mr. Wheeler, observed the "Dunkin," to the letter. Therefore he should be greatly patronized by the Dunkin friends, and I heard that a great number of those contemplated upon doing so, on the coming 12th. Well for them. He has everything convenient, for their comforts.

Mr. Harkumers, Mr. Blacks, and Mr. Fuller's new buildings have added greatly to the magnificence of our town. Some change has taken place here lately, Mr. Martin Mechanic sold out to Mr. Carscallen, and while on his Western tour, he bought a place. All for the West.

The Revd. Mr. Wilson has commenced his ministry at the M. E. Church. Success to the young man, may much good be done by his labor here, it is much needed.

Yours &c.,

Ego Ero.

BEAVER LAKE.

MR. EXPRESS, I did not see anything in your last, from Gohchebodd. What could be the reason? Well, perhaps he is gone up West, where many are going, (some for pleasure, and others for something else) in these days. Then please to allow me to take his stand for this time, I have not heard of anything very strange taking place about Beaver Lake of late.

I understand it to be a general complaint here, as in many other places, that the worms are working destructively both in the field and the garden. Garden produce suffers the most from these pests, they love darkness rather than light, therein they perform their evil deeds. I find that the potato bugs are very numerous around here. It seems as if they were determined to conquer, this summer, they have collected their forces together, a mortal war has been declared, and a great slaughter is contemplated, especially if the Paris green ammunition will not fail. It is to be hoped that the Magazines will be well stored, ready for the conflict.

It is evident that the people around here have been doing their road work for this year. The travelling is greatly improved. But I understand that there is great dissatisfaction, among the people, their tasks were over double this year, to what they were last. They would like some of their leading men to give the

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

Mr. T. J. B. HARDING,

DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which ceased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY SNIDER.

SUPERSTITION

A panacea, or "cure all" is one of the rths of the age of superstition. Dr.
V. Pierce does not recommend any
e or even his whole list of standard medies as adequate to cure every sease. For severe lingering coughs, onchial, throat, and chronic lung dis-ses, he believes his Golden Medical scovary is unsurpassed, but it will not re you if your lungs are half wasted by nsumption. The Discovery not only erices a potent influence over pulmo-
ry affections, by reason of its pectoral operties, but possesses also the most luable alterative, or blood-cleansing
operties, and is therefore a sovereign
edy in blood and skin affections.
it while it will cure scrofulous and
er ulcers or sores, blotches, pimples,
der eruptions, it will not cure cancer,
r does its manufacturer claim any such rit for it as is done by proprietors of er blood-cleansing medicines, who honestly try to deceive the afflicted in-the belief that their preparations will omplish impossibilities. By reason its real intrinsic merit it has a sale rassing that of any other blood and gh medicine.

continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-ness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which ceased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

MAKING A HOME OF THE FARM.

The farm as a home will have its garden and its orchard, for beauty as well as profit; will have poultry and animals which possess other than a money value. The eye of the owner will be seeking vistas through the groves and forests, through which sun and shade may play. If he clears away the ancient trees, he will spare a copse here and a thicket there, for his very cattle will thank him for their shelter, and no passer-by will fail to admire the taste and forethought which, with the meadow of the ploughed field, retains the glories of maple or birch, or elm, or gnarled beech.

Such things are coming even among us to have a value even in dollars and cents. With better roads, which are a crying need of our rural districts, a drive of four or five miles, or twice as much, is not always an evil. The purer air, the restful quiet, the retirement for study, counterbalance some of the conveniences of the village. The homestead with acres for a lawn, decorated with a stream which grows and changes with the seasons; with groves that are rich in original treasures of the forest; with something new always in the fields ripening for the harvest, and in the orchard as responsive to the season's fashions as any Fifth avenue belle; with poultry, and sheep, and horses, and cattle, that welcome you, and are grateful for your care—must be something more than a shop or factory. Because Americans have had too much land, they have not learned yet, as the English in their restricted island have done, to count their trees and inventory watercourses, and make much of every hill and valley, every phase and variety of scenery. Instead of degrading the farm more into a treadmill of compulsory labour, we need more and more to decorate it with the attractions of home, to connect it with pleasures and culture, to bring out the best features of its landscape, the special beauties of gorge or hill or grove or meadow with which nature has adorned it. The most careless observers learn how venerable, graceful or sturdy trees designate an entire district; how a well-cultivated garden wins admiration; how the very soil and air may tell that a farm has a man of taste and brains for its master. He has made his home there; he has treated the acres in a kindly, generous way. He has not gone at his farm as if it were a slave, to be abused and stinted, with the one purpose of giving it the least possible, while extorting the most from it. Even as a question of profit, the wise rule is to care for the farm as a home.—George R. Waring, in Scribner's Monthly.

CHLORIDE OF LIME FOR VERMIN.

A correspondent of the London Builder writes:—Some years ago I read in a French scientific periodical that chloride of lime would rid a house of all these nuisances. I treasured up the information until opportunity offered for testing its value, and this occurred some four years since. I took an old country house infested with rats, mice and flies. I stuffed every rat and mousehole with the chloride. I threw it on the quarry floors of the dirt and cellars. I kept saucers of it under the chests and drawers, or some other convenient piece of furniture; in every nursery, bed or dressing room. An ornamental glass vase held a quantity at the foot of each staircase. Stables, cowsheds, pigsties, all had their dose, and the result was glorious. I thoroughly routed my enemies, and if the rats, more impudent than the rest, did make renewed attacks upon the dirt in about twelve months, when, probably from repeated cleansing and flushing, all traces of the chloride had vanished, a handful of fresh again routed them, and left me master of my own premises.

Last year was a great year for wasps: they wouldn't face the chloride, though in the dining-room, in which we had none,—as its smell, to me most refreshing and wholesome, is not approved by all persons—we had a perpetual warfare. And all this comfort for eighteen pence! Only let housewives beware that they place not the chloride in their china pantries, or in too close proximity to bright steel ware, or the result will be that their gilded china will be reduced to plain, and their bright steel fenders to rusty iron in no time.

CANBERRIES ON PINE LAND.

A grower gives the following experience in the Journal of Agriculture:
"Three or four years ago I transplanted cranberry vines from my meadow to one of my gardens, which is plain pine land. They have grown well and are loaded with fruit. I had compromised with them if they would come and live with me on my land, I would bring them their native soil, so that they would not suffer by emigration. I dug channels two feet wide, 20 inches deep and three feet apart. I removed the gravel and filled the channels with muck from whence they were to be taken. I took up the cranberry plants and set them deep in their native element. They appeared to be perfectly contented in their new locality. They now occupy one square rod of ground, and are beginning to enlarge their borders. I keep the patch clear of weeds. The expense of this cranberry square rod was about two days, labor of one man, and one day's labor for one hour. The prospect now is that the cranberries will yearly pay the expense of their new settlement. Muck and experiments well directed will prove successful.

HOW TO GET RID OF TREE STUMPS.

General Colquitt, of Georgia, in a recent address, gave the following two ways of doing this:—To remove stumps from a field, all that is necessary is to have one or more sheet-iron chimneys, some four or five feet high. Set fire to the stump and place the chimney over it, so as to give the requisite draught at the bottom.

Set fire to the stump and place the chimney over it, so as to give the requisite draught at the bottom. It will draw like a stove. The stump will soon be consumed. With several such chimneys, of different sizes, the removal of stumps may be accomplished at merely nominal labor and expense. In the autumn bore a hole an inch or two in diameter, according to the girth of the stump, vertically in the centre of the latter, about eighteen inches deep. Put into it from one to two ounces of saltpeter; fill the hole with water and plug up close. In the ensuing spring take out the plug, and pour in about one or two gills of kerosene oil and ignite it. The stump will smoulder without blazing, to the very extremity of the roots, leaving nothing but ashes.

DAMP WALLS.—When the damp on walls is caused by inferior brick having been used in their construction, which absorb instead resisting the wet, an outer coating of tar and lime, applied with a brush, will be the cheapest remedy for the sides and back of a house; but as it is too dingy for the front, cement or patent outside paint must be used.

TO DRIVE AWAY THE MELON BEETLE.—Set a tomato plant into each hill of cucumbers or melons, and you will have no trouble from the striped bugs that are so destructive to these plants. The plants can be tied to stakes, and if well pruned when large, both subjects can proceed with their fruiting without detriment to one another.

The ex-Empress Eugenie, at a recent reception in Rome, wore black tulle over black silk, décolletée; in her hair was fastened one small diamond and opal pin, and a black marabout feather showed well on the fair hair. Round her neck she wore a broad velvet, on which was fastened diamond stars and pendants, a fine set-off to the exquisite fairness of her magnificent shoulders and bust; long black silk gloves and a few handsome bracelets completed her simple toilet.

The crew of the iron-clad Alexandria, the flagship of the British Mediterranean squadron, recently mutinied, twice—in consequence of over-work and severity of punishment in the first instance, and stoppage of shore leave in the second—and rendered the vessel's guns unserviceable by throwing the sights overboard. The mutiny was quelled with the assistance of the crews of other vessels of the squadron, and the mutineers court-martialed. Three of the ringleaders were sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment, and sent home to undergo their sentence.

In Newark, N. J. Three ruffians forced their way into the house of John Ballenger, outraged his wife, and attempted the same on his daughter, 14 years who escaped. Towards morning the gang, reinforced by four more, reappeared, and some of them again outraged Mrs. Ballenger, while the others dragged the girl off to the woods near Waverley, and all outraged her. Mr. Ballenger was home at their last visit, but was subdued by threats and the sight of knives and pistols. After the departure of the villains, he notified the police, and two of them were arrested and identified.

The village of Onota, Lake Superior, caught from the burning forest and was destroyed. Every building, excepting the school house and church, was burned. Loss $100,000. About 700 people are homeless. A tug with coal has been sent from Marquette. A steamer from Osceola reached Onota yesterday evening in the woods south-west of Onota, and along the north shore towards Green Bush. Business is reported suspended at Au Sable, and the entire population of the village is out fighting the fire.

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps. The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

AMERICANS ABROAD

The cheap excursion tickets to E have been the means of presenting singular specimens of our country foreign eyes. Curtis Guild, in his book of European travel, "Abroad," gives a pen-picture of some of characters met in Europe—stern rea-descriptions of which, have hitherto erally been deemed caricatures:

Foreign travel is doubtless a most able instructor; and few America average common sense can travel to extent, either at home or abroad, wi-
adding to their stock of knowledge,
receiving a certain amount of practistruction of real value. But certain have met American parties abroad;
fit for foreign travel, and who would ceive as little intellectual benefit fr-
as a student in mathematics who havanced no further than simple add-would from a week's instruction in a culation of logarithms.

The cheap excursion system has
abled a large number of this clatravellers to visit Europe; and, alth-
not far a moment denying that it ha-
abled many worthy and well-edu-
persons of limited means an opportfor foreign travel and sight-seeing they might never have been enabl-

verdant specimens of humanity,
even in our own great cities would excursion ticket to Europe and the V Exposition, scraped together their adding to their stock of knowledge, and receiving a certain amount of practical instruction of great value. But certainly have met American parties abroad as a student in mathematics who has advanced no further than simple addition would from a week's instruction in a calculation of logarithms.

The cheap excursion system has enabled a large number of this class travellers to visit Europe; and, although not far a moment denying that it has enabled many worthy and well-educated persons of limited means an opportunity for foreign travel and sight-seeing which they might never have been enabled to enjoy, yet many of the most outre and verdant specimens of humanity, though in our own great cities would have excited observation, from all, and even ridicule from the unthinking, attracted by the wonderfully low figure of a Co. excursion ticket to Europe and the Vienna Exposition, scraped together their $3 or $400, or withdrew it from the count savings banks, and swarmed into the old country like crusaders after this ne Peter the Hermit, who preached the traction of the distant capital to the which they were to advance upon, as painted the journey in glowing color. There were men from Vermont who had never seen the Green Mountains; from Western New York, who couldn't tell you the height of Niagara Falls; a Illinois farmer who had never been in any city in his life but Indianapolis.

Great tall fellows, with mournful clothed finger-nails, who chewed tobacco and spat on the marble floors of cathedrals, and were the very types of character which English writers have described in their books on America as representatives of our country—descriptions which may have vexed us, and caused more than one to avow them to be caricature overdrawn sketches, or malicious misrepresentations. Yet here they were in propria persona, stalking through the Vienna Exposition, sticking their boot up on railroad-car seats, or stumbling over kneeling worshippers in St. Peter's.

One of this class came into our railway carriage between Munich and Vienna—tall, somewhat ungainly-looking man with the national characteristics of the American countryman as prominent as the word had been painted upon his forehead. In the railway carriage, beside ourselves, was an Englishman and his daughter, our pleasant travelling companions, on both of whom the new corner soon opened fire, beginning with the usual fusillade of questions:

"You ain't an American, are ye?"
"No, sir, I am not."
"English, I s'pose?"
"Yes."
"Going to Vienna?"
"Yes."
"I s'pose ye mean to go to the World Fair there, don't ye?"
"I think we shall go to the Exposition while we are there."
"What hotel shall you put up at?"
"We shall go to this Hotel Metropole."
"How?"
"The Metropolitan Hotel." I volunteered, in explanation for my English friend who was beginning to be amused. The dialogue was resumed.

"Oh, ah! Yes! I don't understand French; but our party—he's the editorial excursion party—have an interpreter who goes along with us all the time and translates everything."

Englishman—Sir, you are very fortunate.

Yankee—Yaas. Whole trip for Amerikee and back only four hundred dollars.

Eng.—Very reasonable.
Yan.—Big pile of money fur some o us; but I was bound to come. Ever bee to Vienna before?

Eng.—Yes.
Yan.—How big a place is it?
Eng.—It's a city of six hundred thousand inhabitants.
Yan.—You don't say so! By the by Vienna is the capital of Orstrey, ain it?

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of ST. JEROME, P. Q. Sept. 12, 1875.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING.

Dear Sir— Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you that it has done for me, I am twenty-nine years old, had been out of health for about five years. Had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which cured my pains and gave me an improved appetite and health, as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

here set down.]

to enjoy yourself. How old do you call yourself?
[At this point the good natured Briton,
who had been amused more than vexed
by this impertinent catechism, changed
his tactics and replied to his interrogator's
last question in the true American style
—by asking another—and continued to follow him up after the same fashion he had been attacked himself, as follows:]
Eng.—How old should you think me?
Yan.—Wal, about a matter of sixty-five or seven.

AMERICANS ABROAD.

The cheap excursion tickets to Europe have been the means of presenting some singular specimens of our countrymen to foreign eyes. Curtis Guild, in his lively book of European travel, "Abroad Again," gives a pen-picture of some of these characters met in Europe—stern realities, descriptions of which have hitherto generally been deemed caricatures:

Foreign travel is doubtless a most valuable instructor; and few Americans of average common sense can travel to any extent, either at home or abroad, without adding to their stock of knowledge, and receiving a certain amount of practical instruction of great value. But certainly I have met American parties abroad as unfit for foreign travel, and who would receive as little intellectual benefit from it, as a student in mathematics who has advanced no further than simple addition, would from a week's instruction in a calculation of logarithms.

The cheap excursion system has enabled a large number of this class of travellers to visit Europe, and, although not far from a moment denying that it has enabled many worthy and well educated persons of limited means an opportunity for foreign travel and sight-seeing which they might never have been enabled to enjoy, yet many of the most outlandish and verdant specimens of humanity, that even in our own great cities would have excited observation, from all, and even ridicule from the unthinking, attracted by the wonderfully low figure of a Cook excursion ticket to Europe, and the Vienna Exposition, scraped together their $300 or $400, or withdrew it from the country savings banks, and swarmed into the old country like emigrants, this new Peter the Hermit, who preached the attraction of the distant capital to them which they were to advance upon, and painted the journey in glowing colors. There were men from Vermont who had never seen the Green Mountains; from Western New York, who couldn't tell you the height of Niagara Falls; an Illinois farmer who had never been in any city in his life but Indianapolis. Great tall fellows, with mourning clothed finger-nails, who chewed tobacco

Eng.—Forty-two Are you an American?

Yan.—Yes, sir (straightening up.)
Eng.—In what part of America were you born?

Yan.—Wal, I was raised in Vermont, but I moved to Elmira, N. Y.

Eng.—Married?

Yan.—Yes, sir; married when I was twenty-five.

Eng.—Any children?

Yan.—No, sir, never had none.

Eng.—Wife travelling with you?

Yan.—No, sir; I'm a widower.

Eng.—Ah! excuse me; but what's your business when you are at home?

Yan.—I'm a milkman—I carry round milk.

Eng.—(smiling)—But what will your customers do for milk while you are away?

Yan.—Oh I sold out my route, which was a good one, for five hundred dollars, and took four on't and bought one of them Cook tickets to come out here to the Vienna Exhibition.

This milk revelation was too much for me, who had been stifling my laughter by every possible device, as the unmerciful Englishman went on with his quizzing of the enemy; and at this point I was compelled to seek relief in an explosion of laughter, in which he joined, and, to our no small astonishment, the milkman also, who remarked that it was a good joke; and he "guessed the feller that bought the route would hev easier work deliverin' milk to his customers than collectin' their bills."

The above dialogue was no fancy sketch and its hero was an actual sample of an American excursionist; and it is not the only one of this description either that the facilities for travel the cheap ticket system, and Vienna Exhibition attracted from their native land, for I have encountered several others equally amusing. One who rushed up to the carriage of a party of us who were leaving the hotel to say that he was going to travel with a courier, and so far from seeing the point, when asked by a gentleman if he wanted to improve his acquaintance in the leather trade; seriously replied that he never had any dealings in that line. Another, in Rome, on being asked to join a party to visit the Colosseum, replied, "Colosseum! what's that?"

"Why, the old Roman circus, you know."

"Oh, yes! Is there a performance this evening? What time does it begin?"

An explanation that the circus referred to was unlike the modern one, with horses, clowns and acrobats, had to be gently hinted to this ambitious sight-seer to prevent misapprehension and disappointment.—[New York World.

BISHOP BENSON ON EDUCATION.

Bishop Benson, (Eng.) in a farewell address at Lincoln spoke as follows with regard to the general privilege of Education in the mother country, which is ever dear to me.

"He had always been of a strong opinion that there ought to be no privileged class with regard to education. Every lad in England, (what about the girls,) ought to be able—if he had parents that know what they were about—to go to school, and learn what a child could learn, and if he showed ability he ought to be passed on to a better school still, and if he got to the top of that school, passed on to a higher one. And just at the age when poor parents could not afford to keep the boy at school any longer, then he thought it was the proper time for the State to step in and say to the parents, 'We will pay the school fees and supply the books for your boy's education,—because he is a boy of industry, wit, and character, and we will send him from school to school, to the University and from thence to a profession.' This was an ideal state of things, but in a country of enormous resources like England, they ought not to be satisfied until the old proverb was realized, that there was no boy born in this country who could not be the Lord Chancellor of England, or the Archbishop of Canterbury. It would be a good thing if they could only get the money originally left for the purpose of education applied to the proper object. But they must not make use of party cries in their endeavors to carry it out. Some people say the rich stepped in and got the foundations. It was not true—way was there any color for saying so? Because the rich people had had the sense to see the value of education, and the poor people had not. Poor people thought that if they could take a girl or boy from school just to earn a few pence, it would be better than making a great effort and sacrifice by keeping them at school. Rich people had not done that. Rich people had constantly said, 'I would rather spend money on the education of my boys than save it and hand it over to them when I die.' Rich people knew it was much better to educate their children well than to leave them any amount of money. Any boy in all England, if he had sufficient knowledge, and his parents took sufficient pains with him, could go to Eton and Winchester and get the highest education England could afford, and be sent to a University. These were only two foundations, and the same thing wanted extending everywhere, so that as he said, little Jack Smith could turn out an Archbishop or Lord Chancellor if he liked.

Now there is much that is excellent and admirable in the sentiments enunciated by the Bishop, but there are certain assertions which are not strictly in accordance with facts. Doubtless, even at the present time, under existing circumstances, clever lads, albeit only Jack Smiths, may become Lord Chan-

Illinois farmer who had never been in any city in his life but Indianapolis.

Great tall fellows, with mourning
clothed finger-nails, who chewed tobacco and spat on the marble floors of cathedrals, and were the very types of character which English writers have described in their books on America as representatives of our country—descriptions which may have vexed us, and caused more than one to avow them to be caricatures,
overdrawn sketches, or malicious misrepresentations. Yet here they were in propria persona, stalking through the Vienna Exposition, sticking their boots
up on railroad-car seats, or stumbling over kneeling worshippers in St. Peter's.

One of this class came into our railway carriage between Munich and Vienna—a tall, somewhat ungainly-looking man,
with the national characteristics of the American countryman as prominent as if the word had been painted upon his forehead. In the railway carriage, besides ourselves, was an Englishman and his daughter, our pleasant travelling companions, on both of whom the newcomer soon opened fire, beginning with the usual fusillade of questions:

"You aint an American, are ye?"
"No, sir, I am not."
"English, I s'pose?"
"Yes."
"Going to Vienna?"
"Yes."
"I s'pose ye mean to go to the World's Fair there, don't ye?"
"I think we shall go to the Exposition
while we are there."
"What hotel shall you put up at?"
"We shall go to this Hotel Metropole."
"Haow?"

"The Metropolitan Hotel." I volunteered, in explanation for my English friend, who was beginning to be amused. The dialogue was resumed.

"Oh, ah! Yes! I don't understand French; but our party—we're the educational excursion party—hev an interpreter who goes 'long with us all the time and translates everything."

Englishman—Sir, you are very fortun-

Yankee—Yaas. Whole trip from Amerikee and back only four hundred dollars.

Eng.—Very reasonable.
Yan.—Big pile of money fur some on us; but I was bound to come. Ever been to Vienna before?

Eng.—Yes.
Yan.—How big a place is it?
Eng.—It's a city of six hundred thousand inhabitants.

Yan.—You don't say so! By the by,
Vienny is the capital of Orstrey, ain't it?

Eng.—It is.
Yan.—Which way are you goin' when you leave Vienny?

Eng.—North.

Englishmen in Russia.

Russia refuses all applications of British officers to accompany the army as spectators.

The British military attache at St.
Petersburg has, after confidential inquiry, recommended his countrymen not to repeat or press such applications.

The London Globe says:—We hear that great uneasiness prevails among the English residents in Russia in connection with the present unsettled state of political affairs. More than one person has been insulted for belonging to
"the country in league with the infidel Turks," and the language used by the lower orders is so menacing that in case of hostilities few Englishmen would care
to remain in Russia. During the Cirimean war the Emperor Nicholas issued a ukaz taking the English residents
under the protection of the Government,
and not a single expression of ill feeling occurred, in spite of the reverses suffered by Russia. But now, owing to the spread of education among the workmen
in towns, the people are able to read the violent Anglophobian pamphlets and newspapers of the Pan Slavonic committee at Moscow, who associate England with the perpetration of the atrocities in Bulgaria, and express their opinions respecting this country in such an abusive manner that Englishmen resident twenty or thirty years in Russia
are preparing to realize their property
and return home directly hostilities break out. At present there are two thousand of our countrymen in St. Petersburg, and three thousand scattered over the rest of the empire. English interests in the capital are very large, many of the largest manufacturers belonging to the English living there. A large number of engineers, mechanics and weavers are employed in the interior; at Cronstadt, Riga and other ports, the sea-going trade is chiefly controlled by English merchants and agents, while in the South near Tanagerog, are several colonies of Welsh miners, one of which, called Hughesofka, after its founder, consists of more than one hundred immigrants.

Cheap Girls.

A girl who makes herself too cheap is one to be avoided. No young man, not even the worst, excepting for a base purpose, wants anything to do with a cheap
young lady. For a wife, none but a fool or a rascal will approach such a woman.
Cheap jewelry nobody will touch if he can get any better. Cheap girls are nothing but the refuse; and the young men
know it, and they will look in every other direction for a life-long friend and
companion before they will give a glance
at the phibbeek stuff that tinkles at every ttr, for fascinating the eye of any
that will look. You think it quite the
"correct thing" to talk loudly and coarse-
ly, be boisterous and hoydenish in all
public places; to make yourself so bold
and forward and commonplace, everywhere, that people wonder if you ever
had a mother, or home, or anything to do. So be it. You will probably be taken for what you are worth, and one of
these years, if you do not make worse
than a shipwreck of yourself, you will begin to wonder where the charms are
that once you thought yourself possessed
of, and what evil-spirit could have so befuddled you. Go on, but remember these just to earn a few pence, it would be better than making a great effort and sacrifice by keeping them at school. Rich people had not done that. Rich people had constantly said: 'I would rather spend money on the education of my boys' than save it and hand it over to them when I die.' Rich people knew it was much better to educate their children well than to leave them any amount of money. Any boy in all England, if he had sufficient knowledge, and his parents took sufficient pains with him,

could go to Eton and Winchester and get the highest education England could afford, and be sent to a University.
These were only two foundations, and the same thing wanted extending everywhere, so that as he said, little Jack Smith could turn out an Archbishop or Lord Chancellor if he liked.

Now there is much that is excellent and admirable in the sentiments enunciated by the Bishop, but there are certain assertions which are not strictly in accordance with facts. Doubtless, even at the present time, under existing circumstances, clever lads, albeit only Jack Smiths, may become Lord Chancellors or even Archbishops of Canterbury, for the simple reason that both these posts must be filled by men having brains in their heads, and who have devoted a considerable portion of their lives to deep, dry study. The Bishop says, "It would be a good thing if they could only get the money originally left for the purposes of education applied to its proper object?" But he denies that rich people have stepped in and appropriated to themselves educational advantages intended for the poor. The Bishop admits the fact of monkey advantages being left. Then the question naturally comes forward, Where is this money? It is evident the poor are deprived of it, and if the rich have not appropriated it, where is it? It would be well to find where the boy is to be found, and the Judases that obtain it.
Has the Bishop ever heard of Christ
Church and Dulwich Schools—expressly
founded for children whose parents were
too poor to have them educated at their own expense, and both of which institutions have been converted into schools
for the middle and higher classes of Society? Princes, peers, bishops, and others of the highest positions, did, and
for all I know to the contrary, do at the present day, obtain for the children of
their butlers, valets, concubines, &c.,
admission to such institutions. Indeed
no child was admitted who was not nominated by some person of rank and wealth
and position, and who generally abused
the power and patronage he possessed in
the manner I have described. But the Bishop justifies that spoliation on the part of the rich by arguing that they "had
the sense to see the value of education
and the poor had not!" I must confess
that I do not understand this expression
of the Bishop,—but by a parity of reasoning, it might be contended that supposing the ignorant man being in possession of a coin, and unaware of its value, the
better informed would be justified in filching it from him and appropriating
the same to his own use.

No reasoning, however spacious, will justify the conduct of the clergy in regard
to the misappropriation of educational endowments. They looked on unconcernedly whilst one bequest after
another was taken from the poor and perverted to the uses of the rich. They have done the same in other matters. They saw land-robbars filch hundreds of acres
of commons land intended for the use and
benefit of all classes, without uttering in
the pulpit or elsewhere one word of remonstrance against these bare-faced robbers. And why was this? Simply because the nobility and the wealthy
commonality of the country were leagued
with the clergy to rob the people. No wonder, then, that whilst the poor were
thus pillaged on one hand by the titled
and wealthy orders, and by the clerical
fraternity on the other, their children
were reared in ignorance! Be this to the eternal shame of those who are the
pillagers of the poor.

can get any better. Cheap girls are nothing but the refuse; and the young men
know it, and they will look in every
other direction for a life-long friend and
companion before they will give a glance
at the pickbeek stuff that tinkles at every turn, for fascinating the eye of any
that will look. You think it quite the
"correct thing" to talk loudly and coarse-
ly, be boisterous and hoydenish in all
public places; to make yourself so bold
and forward and commonplace, every-
where, that people wonder if you ever
had a mother, or home, or anything to
do. So be it. You will probably be taken for what you are worth, and one of
these years, if you do not make worse
than a shipwreck of yourself, you will
begin to wonder where the charms are
that once you thought yourself possessed
of, and what evil spirit could have so be-fooled you. Go on, but remember, cheap girls attract nobody but fools and rascals.

Archbishop Lynch and the Dunkin Act.

We learn from the Tribune newspaper of Toronto that in his address to the congregation of St. Michael's on Sunday last Archbishop Lynch referred to the Dunkin
Act. We quote from our contemporary:—"After some further remarks,
his Grace alluded to the Dunkin Act,
and, whilst condemning the evils of intemperance, remarked that the Church has never countenanced violent or harsh measures, and where this law has been enforced drunkards club together and bring home, in large quantities, strong drinks, and imbibe to excess in their own houses, thus setting a very bad example to their families. Again, opium and other poisonous drugs are freely partaken of as substitutes, which have a pernicious effect on future generations,
and other diseases are the consequence."
The Archbishop's remarks were well known, and always enjoyed the performance of his people. But as the Dunkin Act he takes precisely the same ground as ourselves, which we believe to be the true temperance ground.
We hold that the passage of the Dunkin Act in Toronto would be a serious mistake, if not a great evil.

printed to themselves educational advantages intended for the poor. The Bishop admits the fact of money advantages being left. Then the question
naturally comes forward, Where is this
money? It is evident the poor are deprived of it, and if the rich have not appropriated it, where is it? It would be well to find where the money is to be found, and the Judges that obtain it.
Has the Bishop ever heard of Christ
Church and Dulwich Schools—expressly
founded for children whose parents were
too poor to have them educated at their own expense, and both of which institutions have been converted into schools
for the middle and higher classes of Society? Princes, peers, bishops, and
others of the highest positions, did, and
for all I know to the contrary, do at the present day, obtain for the children of
their butlers, valets, concubines, &c.,
admission to such institutions. Indeed
no child was admitted who was not nominated by some person of rank and wealth
and position, and who generally abused
the power and patronage he possessed in
the manner I have described. But the Bishop justifies that spoliation on the
part of the rich by arguing that they "had
the sense to see the value of education
and the poor had not." I must confess
that I do not understand this expression
of the Bishop,—but by a parity of reasoning, it might be contended that supposing the ignorant man being in possession
of a coin, and unaware of its value, the
better informed would be justified in
filching it from him and appropriating
the same to his own use.

No reasoning, however specious, will
justify the conduct of the clergy in regard
to the misappropriation of educational
endowments. They looked on uncon-
cernedly whilst one bequest after
another was taken from the poor and per-
verted to the uses of the rich. They have done the same in other matters. They saw land-robbers filch hundreds of acres
of commons land intended for the use and
benefit of all classes, without uttering in
the pulpit or elsewhere one word of re-
monstrance against these bare-faced
robbers. And why was this? Simply
because the nobility and the wealthy
commonality of the country were leagued
with the clergy to rob the people. No
wonder, then, that whilst the poor were
thus pillaged on one hand by the titled
and wealthy orders, and by the clerical
fraternity on the other, their children
were reared in ignorance. Be this to
the eternal shame of those who are the
pillagers of the poor.

The Cattle Trade.

The North British Agriculturist
says:—Messrs. John Bell & Son, Glasgow, have this season shipped 445 cattle from America to this country. It is anticipated, however, that this trade will in the course of a week or two assume larger proportions. Among the additional steamers to be employed in the traffic is one fitted with strong stalls on the main deck, so arranged that each animal shall be provided with a separate berth.
Out of the 445 cattle which have come to land this season, only four have died on the passage. Practical men accompany the cattle from America to this country—there being on the average one to every twenty or twenty-five head of cattle. These men come with one steamer and return with the other, a much more satisfactory arrangement
than formerly existed, of picking men up to attend the cattle, offering them in payment a free passage to Britain. Up to the end of July the cattle imported will be principally known as Canadian house-fed. The supply after July will be drawn principally from the States.

Archie's Snobbery.

Mr. James writes from London:—If you think snobbery in England has died out under the sarcasm of "Such Paper," you have completely misunderstood. It is on record that last week a boy educated at the City of London school, was nominated to a clerkship in the City of London Docks. He passed a satisfactory examination, but was informed that his services would not be required. Why? Because his father was a coachman. Yet Lord Beaconsfield was an attorney's clerk, and his wife a milliner; Mr. Adams, Queen's counsel, who was Governor of Hong Kong, was a printer's reader, and his wife a seamstress. It may be well asked who are these snobs of the City of London Docks, who disqualify a young fellow on grounds that are no bar to the learned professions, nor to the civil service. Some years ago I had the honor of a special engagement to attend a grand national ball at the dowagers City of Bath, to describe the scene for the leading journal there. I was requested to go by a back staircase into the orchestra, as it was impossible to get a newspaper man an invitation; for the committee had refused tickets to the daughters of the Mayor, because their father was a linendraper. I need hardly say that I described that ball, but not in the local paper, and I afterwards learned that no tradesman was allowed to sit in the dress circle of the Bath theatre. I once resided in a western county. For the time being the high sheriff of a county is a direct representative of the Queen. It is an honorary office, and costs the man who holds it $10,000 or $15,000 at least. He meets the judges of assize in state, attended by his jaylin men and retainers. The judges are forbidden to receive his hospitality, for some old world reason or another. They are therefore entertained at a dinner once at least during the assize by the Lord-Lieutenant. I had the honor of an invitation to dine at one of these by the Earl of B. but he excluded the high sheriff because he was a manufacturer. Not even the royal seal of Majesty protected the plebeian sheriff from the aristocratic snub direct. The late Lord Fitzhardinge was almost feudal in his aristocratic brutality to all that were beneath him. He was a great hunter and as great a swearer. One day he encountered a new tenant in a hunting field—a Scotchman, who had come west to farm in the southern valley. The Scotchman somehow crossed the track of the hard driving lord, who turned upon the northerner with a volley of oaths, "D—n you, who the devil are you, sir?" The northerner put his horse at the noble lord and nearly spilt him, with a volley of oaths quite equal to his lordship's. "D—n ye, an' whae the deil are ye? and do ye think there's naeboddy in the field can curse and swear but ye?"

Englishmen in Russia.

Bishop Benson, (Eng.) in a farewell address at Lincoln spoke as follows with regard to the general privilege of Education in the mother country, which is ever dear to me.

"He had always been of a strong opinion that there ought to be no privileged class with regard to education. Every lad in England, (what about the girls,) ought to be able—if he had parents that know what they were about—to go to school, and learn what a child could learn, and if he showed ability he ought to be passed on to a better school still, and if he got to the top of that school, passed on to a higher one. And just at the age when poor parents could not afford to keep the boy at school any longer, then he thought it was the proper time for the State to step in and say to the parents, 'We will pay the school fees and supply the books for your boy's education,—because he is a boy of industry, wit, and character, and we will send him from school to school, to the University and from thence to a profession.' This was an ideal state of things, but in a country of enormous resources like England, they ought not to be satisfied until the old proverb was realized, that there was no boy born in this country who could not be the Lord Chancellor of England, or the Archbishop of Canterbury. It would be a good thing if they could only get the money originally left for the purpose of education applied to the proper object. But they must not make use of party cries in their endeavors to carry it out. Some people say the rich stepped in and got the foundations. It was not true—why was there any color for saying so? Because the rich people had had the sense to see the value of education, and the poor people had not. Poor people thought that if they could take a girl or boy from school just to earn a few pence, it would be better than making a great effort and sacrifice by keeping them at school. Rich people had not done that. Rich people had constantly said, 'I would rather spend money on the education of my boys' than save it and hand it over to them when I die.' Rich people knew it was much better to educate their children well than to leave them any amount of money. Any boy in all England, if he had sufficient knowledge, and his parents took sufficient pains with him, could go to Eton and Winchester and get the highest education England could afford, and be sent to a University. These were only two foundations, and the same thing wanted extending everywhere, so that as he said, little Jack Smith could turn out an Archbishop or Lord Chancellor if he liked.

Now there is much that is excellent and admirable in the sentiments enunciated by the Bishop, but there are certain assertions which are not strictly in accordance with facts. Doubtless, even at the present time, under existing circumstances, clever lads, albeit little Jack Smiths, may become Lord Chancellors or even Archbishops of Canterbury, for the simple reason that both

Wrestling in Macedonia.

Col. James Baker, in his Turkey in Europe, gives the following account of a wrestling match he witnessed while traversing the great plain of Macedonia.

"I passed through a very fine town called Baskli-Djuma, in the middle of the plain, and inhabited principally by Christian Bulgarians. A great wrestling match was going on just outside the town, and I stopped to witness the sport. A circle about thirty yards in diameter was formed by the men, women and children—Turks, Bulgarians, and a plentiful supply of gypsies—all sitting closely packed together around the circumference. There was the usual accompaniment of a gypsy band, composed of a drum and a clarinet, which was kept going constantly. A competitor, stripped to the waist, steps into the ring and walks round with a grand air as he displays his muscular frame to the admiring gaze of the bystanders. Presently his antagonist enters the ring and both competitors shake hands in a good-natured way, and a little laughing and chaffing goes on. They then commence walking round, every now and then turning in to shake hands again, until suddenly one pounces upon the other to get the 'catch' and the struggle commences. No kicking is allowed, and the throw must lay the vanquished man upon his back, so that both shoulder-blades touch the ground at the same time. The champion was a burly Bulgarian of herculean strength, when at the invitation of some black-eyed gypsy girls a fine but slim young fellow of their tribe entered the lists against him; but, although considering his youth he made a gallant struggle, a quick throw laid him sprawling on his back, to the evident chagrin and disappointment of the gypsy women. Their eyes flashed with anger as they now held a hurried consultation, when off started a very pretty girl, evidently bound upon some errand. She soon returned with one of the most splendid specimens of humanity I ever saw. If, as is asserted, there were princes and dukes among the ancient tribe of gypsies who emigrated to Europe this must certainly have been a descendant of one of them. His fair escort pushed him into the ring with an air of pride and confidence, as much as to say, 'Now, you shall see what a gypsy can do.' The young man was about 25 years of age, and nearly six feet high, with a handsome, aristocratic and cheery countenance, and as he took off his jacket and handed it to his fair one, and thus stood stripped to the waist, there was a buzz of admiration from the whole crowd. He was slightly made but all was sinew. Laughingly, and half modestly, he shook his powerful antagonist by his hand, and then the walk round commenced, the young gypsy laughing and talking all the time. It seemed as though neither liked to be the first to begin; when suddenly the Bulgarian turned sharp upon his antagonist, and tried a favorite catch, but quick as lightning the lithe figure of the gypsy eluded the grasp, and a sigh of relief went up from his clan. The excitement was now intense, and the young girl perfectly quivered with nervous anx-

The Bishop says, "It would be a good thing if they could only get the money originally left for the purposes of education applied to its proper object?" But he denies that rich people have stepped in and appropriated to themselves educational advantages intended for the poor. The Bishop admits the fact of money advantages being left. Then the question naturally comes forward, Where is this money? It is evident the poor are deprived of it, and if the rich have not appropriated it, where is it? It would be well to find where the box is to be found, and the Judases that obtain it. Has the Bishop ever heard of Christ Church and Dulwich Schools—expressly founded for children whose parents were too poor to have them educated at their own expense, and both of which institutions have been converted into schools for the middle and higher classes of Society? The excitement was now intense, and the young girl perfectly quivered with nervous anxiety as she watched every movement of her swain. She would have made a splendid picture. They were still walking round, and it seems as though the struggle would never begin, when, lo! a simultaneous cry went forth from the whole crowd as the great Bulgarian sprawling and half-stunned upon the ground. The movements of the gypsy had been so quick that it was impossible to say how the throw was done, but the Bulgarian turned almost a somersault in the air, and came down with a heavy thud. The young champion shook him by the hand, lifted the heavy man high into the air, and then set him on his feet."

Another Grace Darling.

The bravest girl in Australia is Grace Vernon Russell. The steamer Georgetta was wrecked off the west coast, near Perth; a small boat had been capsized in the surf and women and children were struggling in the water. On the crest of a precipitous cliff appeared the figure of a young lady on horseback. To the sailors on the stranded vessel it seemed utterly impossible that a horse and its rider should be able to descend that precipice. But the young lady never faltered. She plunged down at full speed, and reaching the shore, spurred her horse into the boiling surf. There were two lines of roaring breakers. With splendid pluck she dashed through them and reached the boat, to which the affrighted women and children were clinging. Her horse stumbled over a hawser which stretched between the wreck and the small boat; but she clung to the saddle and brought the women and children to land. There was still a man left on board the boat. She plunged into the breakers again and brought him safe to the shore. While those whom she had saved were rescuing those who remained on the wreck, the heroic girl, drenched with the sea foam and half-fainting with fatigue, galloped a dozen miles home to have relief sent to the half drowned, half naked folk whom she had left on the beach. Her sister, Mrs. Brockman, took horse, galloped that night through the woods to the shore, taking tea, milk, sugar, and flour for the destitute people; and the next day the rescued were brought to Mr. Brockman's house and cared for. The anxiety and excitement proved fatal to Mrs. Brockman, who took a severe cold, and died eventually of brain fever. Grace Vernon Russell still lives.

Tail-Cutting in China.

From the China papers it appears that the "tail-cutting epidemic," as it is called, has broken out in Perkin. "The Mandarins," says a letter in the Celestial Empire, "have put up a notice offering fifty taels reward for the apprehension of a tail-cutter; but this will hardly have much influence, for the people are persuaded that the agency is supernatural."

"Death is said to follow the loss of the tail within three days; several cases

once at least during the assize by the Lord-Lieutenant. I had the honor of an invitation to dine at one of these by the Earl of B. but he excluded the high sheriff because he was a manufacturer. Not even the royal seal of Majesty protected the plebeian sheriff from the aristocratic snub direct. Roller Skating.

How ice skating came to be the popular sport it now is, is a familiar story, but how roller skating became fashionable remains to be told. The facts are very interesting, as affording an example of American inventive genius.

"Some fifteen years ago," as they say on the stage, Mr. Plimpton, of New York, introduced a patent roller skate, the feature of which was that it admitted of nearly every movement practiced by skaters of the ice to be performed on a smooth wooden floor. The patentee was an enthusiastic admirer of the sport of roller skating, and he spared neither time, money nor labor to introduce it as an American institution, which it is to all intents and purposes. He established roller skating associations and clubs in different cities—had rinks in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville and other cities, where the facilities for ice skating were limited, and finally made the exercise popular. But somehow or other Dame Fashion in this country only took side glances at it, and seeing this and knowing the weakness of our countrymen in regard to the effect of a foreign reputation, Mr. Plimpton finally went to Europe, and after persevering for some years quietly but effectively, he managed to get his favorite exercise introduced into the inner circles of fashionable society, and the result was, that for the past three years the new form of skating has taken such hold of the highest society people of London and Paris as to make it the only fashionable indoor exercise now in vogue in the great metropolis, as also in the centre of fashion of the European continent, the "Patins" having become the rage in Paris as well as in London.

Russian Soldiers—Camp-life.

A correspondent from the camp near Braila writes to the Vienna New Free Press:—"The Berdan rifle is the arm. The soldiers wear the well-known long, gray coats, with red shoulder-straps, on which the number of the army corps is visible, while the number of the regiment is attached to the helmet. Like the cavalry, the infantry wear high boots, with soft and tight legs. Nothing but a silver shoulder-piece distinguishes the officers from the common privates. The means of transportation are made of excellent material. The waggons painted blue carry the necessary number of surplus wheels for the different trains. The troops camping round about Braila are under General Schachowskoï, commander of the Eleventh Corps. At this moment that I am examining the camp, the thermometer indicated a very frosty temperature, the soldiers are bathing in one of the small branches of the river. Near the tents their comrades meanwhile make the tea in large copper samovars. The Russians eat a kind of pea-soup with some meat, rice, and black bread in it. They receive two rations of tea daily. The state of health is excellent. Disease is feared only with the approach of the hot season. At this time there are at Braila some 10,000 men, though a complete division is expected by to-morrow."

very few Englishmen would care in Russia. During the Czar taking the Emperor Nicholas issued the protection of the Government, a single expression of ill feeling, in spite of the reverses suffered. But now, owing to the education among the workmen, the people are able to read the Anglophobic pamphlets and papers of the Pan-Slavonic committee-Moscow, who associate England with the perpetration of the atrocities in Asia, and express their opinions in this country in such a manner that Englishmen residing thirty years in Russia begin to realize their property and home directly hostilities break out present there are two thousand countrymen in St. Petersburg, and thousands scattered over the rest of the empire. English interests in the East are very large, many of the manufacturers belonging to the living there. A large number of mechanics and weavers are employed in the interior; at Cronstadt, and other ports, the sea-going trade is controlled by English merchants and agents, while in the South Caucasus, there are several colonies of miners, one of which, called the Baku, after its founder, consists of more than one hundred immigrants.

Cheap Girls.

I who makes herself too cheap is to be avoided. No young man, not the worst, excepting for a base pursuit anything to do with a cheap girl. For a wife, none but a fool will approach such a woman. Jewelry nobody will touch if he can have any better. Cheap girls are not to be refused; and the young men, and they will look in every direction for a life-long friend and companion before they will give a glance at the cheap stuff that tinkles at the ear, for fascinating the eye of any fool. You think it quite the thing to talk loudly and coarsely, and to make yourself so bold and common, everywhere that people wonder if you ever thought, or home, or anything to be it. You will probably be so what you are worth, and one of these, if you do not make worse shipwreck of yourself, you will wonder where the charms are that you thought yourself possessed of. Go on, but remember, cheap attracts nobody but fools and rascals.

Bishop Lynch and the Dunkin Act.

earn from the Tribune newspaper note that in his address to the common of St. Michael's on Sunday last Bishop Lynch referred to the Dunkin Act. We quote from our contemporary:—"After some further remarks, he alluded to the Dunkin Act, whilst condemning the evils of intemperance, remarked that the Church had countenanced violent or harsh measures, and where this law has been drunkards club together and come in large quantities, strong and imbibed to excess in their uses, thus setting a very bad example to their families. Again, opium and other poisonous drugs are freely paraded as substitutes, which have a deleterious effect on future generations. Other diseases are the result of this strong temptation, and always end in ruin to the people. But as the law is not the true temperance ground, and that the passage of the Dunkin Act would be a serious mistake, not a great evil."

its proper object? But he denies that rich people have stepped in and appropriated to themselves educational advantages intended for the poor. The Bishop admits the fact of money advantages being left. Then the question naturally comes forward, Where is this money? It is evident the poor are deprived of it, and if the rich have not appropriated it, where is it? It would be well to find where the money is to be found, and the Judases that obtain it. Has the Bishop ever heard of Christ Church and Dulwich Schools—expressly founded for children whose parents were too poor to have them educated at their own expense, and both of which institutions have been converted into schools for the middle and higher classes of Society? Princes, peers, bishops, and others of the highest positions, did, and for all I know to the contrary, do at the present day, obtain for the children of their butlers, valets, concubines, &c., admission to such institutions. Indeed no child was admitted who was not nominated by some person of rank and wealth and position, and who generally abused the power and patronage he possessed in the manner I have described. But the Bishop justifies that spoliation on the part of the rich by arguing that they "had the sense to see the value of education and the poor had not." I must confess that I do not understand this expression of the Bishop,—but by a parity of reasoning, it may be contended that supposing the ignorant man being in possession of a coin, and unaware of its value, the better informed would be justified in filching it from him and appropriating the same to his own use.

No reasoning, however spacious, will justify the conduct of the clergy in regard to the misappropriation of educational endowments. They looked on unconcernedly whilst one bequest after another was taken from the poor and perverted to the uses of the rich. They have done the same in other matters. They saw land-robbars filch hundreds of acres of common land intended for the use and benefit of all classes, without uttering in the pulpit or elsewhere one word of remonstrance against these bare-faced robbars. And why was this? Simply because the nobility and the wealthy commonality of the country were leagued with the clergy to rob the people. No wonder, then, that whilst the poor were thus pillaged on one hand by the titled and wealthy orders, and by the clerical fraternity on the other, their children were reared in ignorance. Be this to the eternal shame of those who are the pillagers of the poor.

The Cattle Trade.

The North British Agriculturist says:—"Messrs. John Bell & Son, Glasgow, have this season shipped 445 cattle from America to this country. It is anticipated, however, that this trade will in the course of a week or two assume larger proportions. Among the additional steamers to be employed in the traffic is one fitted with strong stalls on the main deck, so arranged that each animal shall be provided with a separate berth. Out of the 445 cattle which have come to land this season, only four have died on the passage. Practical men accompany the cattle from America to this country—there being on the average one to every twenty or twenty-five head of cattle. These men come with one steamer and return with the other, a much more satisfactory arrangement than formerly existed, of picking men up to attend the cattle, offering them in payment a free passage to Britain. Up to the end of July the cattle imported will be principally known as Canadian house-fed. The supply after July will be drawn principally from the States."

crowd as the great Bulgarian army sprawling and half-stunned upon the ground. The movements of the gipsy had been so quick that it was impossible to say how the throw was done, but the Bulgarian turned almost a somersault in the air, and came down with a heavy thud. The young champion shook him by the hand, lifted the heavy man high into the air, and then set him on his feet."

Another Grace Darling.

The bravest girl in Australia is Grace Vernon Russell. The steamer Georgetta was wrecked off the west coast, near Perth; a small boat had been capsized in the surf and women and children were struggling in the water. On the crest of a precipitous cliff appeared the figure of a young lady on horseback. To the sailors on the stranded vessel it seemed utterly impossible that a horse and its rider should be able to descend that precipice. But the young lady never faltered. She plunged down at full speed, and reaching the shore, spurred her horse into the boiling surf. There were two lines of roaring breakers. With splendid pluck she dashed through them and reached the boat, to which the affrighted women and children were clinging. Her horse stumbled over a hawser which stretched between the wreck and the small boat; but she clung to the saddle and brought the women and children to land. There was still a man left on board the boat. She plunged into the breakers again and brought him safe to the shore. While those whom she had saved were rescuing those who remained on the wreck, the heroic girl, drenched with the sea foam and half-fainting with fatigue, galloped a dozen miles home to have relief sent to the half-drowned, half-mad folks whom she had left on the beach. Her sister, Mrs. Brockman, took horse, galloped that night through the woods to the shore, taking tea, milk, sugar, and flour for the destitute people; and the next day the rescued were brought to Mr. Brockman's house and cared for. The anxiety and excitement proved fatal to Mrs. Brockman, who took a severe cold, and died eventually of brain fever. Grace Vernon Russell still lives.

Tail-Cutting in China.

From the China papers it appears that the "tail-cutting epidemic," as it is called, has broken out in Perkin. "The Mandarins," says a letter in the Celestial Empire, "have put up a notice offering fifty taels reward for the apprehension of a tail-cutter; but this will hardly have much influence, for the people are persuaded that the agency is supernatural."

"Death is said to follow the loss of the tail within three days; several cases of death are reported, and there is so much concurrent testimony that it is difficult not to believe. If there have been deaths it must be the effect of fright, the prophecy, as in many cases, bringing about its own fulfillment. It is common now in the streets to see men with their tails wound around their heads or hanging over the shoulder in front. Charms are of course being distributed freely. One man showed me a charm, when I told him I had a better one, which was to wear the hair after the Western fashion; but he replied, 'Then they would cut off our ears.'"

The Perkin correspondent of the Shanghai Daily News says that two of the eunuchs of the Palace there have been mysteriously deprived of their tails, and such an occurrence taking place within the sacred precincts of the Forbidden City naturally increased the prevailing alarm. The druggists' shops were thronged by eager purchasers of cinabar, which is an unfailing item in the prescriptions for charms to be worn about the person, and many Chinese were afraid to venture out of doors.

Boston is threatened with a new paper, called the New Departure and Colored Progressive Democrat, edited by a colored citizen of Boston.

Work, introduced a patent roller skate, the feature of which was that it admitted of nearly every movement practiced by skaters on the ice to be performed on a smooth wooden floor. The patentee was an enthusiastic admirer of the sport of roller skating, and he spared neither time, money nor labor to introduce it as an American institution, which it is to all intents and purposes. He established roller skating associations and clubs in different cities—had rinks in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville and other cities, where the facilities for ice skating were limited, and finally made the exercise popular. But somehow or other Dame Fashion in this country only took side glances at it, and seeing this and knowing the weakness of our countrymen in regard to the effect of a foreign reputation, Mr. Plimpton finally went to Europe, and after persevering for some years quietly but effectively, he managed to get his favorite exercise introduced into the inner circles of fashionable society, and the result was, that for the past three years the new form of skating has taken such hold of the highest society people of London and Paris as to make it the only fashionable indoor exercise now in vogue in the great metropolis, as also in the centre of fashion of the European continent, the "Patins" having become the rage in Paris as well as in London.

Russian Soldiers — Camp-life.

A correspondent from the camp near Braila writes to the Vienna New Free Press:—"The Berdan rifle is the arm. The soldiers wear the well-known long, gray coats, with red shoulder-straps, on which the number of the army corps is visible, while the number of the regiment is attached to the helmet. Like the cavalry, the infantry wear high boots, with soft and tight legs. Nothing but a silver shoulder-piece distinguishes the officers from the common privates. The means of transportation are made of excellent material. The waggons painted blue carry the necessary number of surplus wheels for the different trains. The troops camping round about Braila are under General Schachowskoï, commander of the Eleventh Corps. At this moment that I am examining the camp, the thermometer indicated a very frosty temperature, the soldiers are bathing in one of the small branches of the river. The state of health is excellent. Disease is feared only with the approach of the hot season. At this time there are at Braila some 10,000 men, though a complete division is expected to arrive to-morrow. Stationary batteries arrived to-day. They are to be put in position to-morrow. The cavalry is neat and well mounted. The corps of engineer and artillery officers appeared to me as deserving special notice."

An Extraordinary Wedding Present.

An extraordinary scene was enacted at a church at Llanabek, near Liverpool, a few days since. One of the villagers having decided to enter the bonds of matrimony, the ceremony was performed in one of the churches. The friends of the contracting parties had assembled in considerable numbers to witness the marriage ceremony, and the service having been satisfactorily concluded, the newly married couple proceeded down the aisle to leave the church. But ere they had left the holy place, a woman rose from one of the seats and flung a baby into the hands of the bridegroom, saying that his wife would probably take care of his progeny for the future. The feelings of both bride and bridegroom may perhaps be imagined.

Miss Elizabeth Thompson, the well known battle painter, of the famous "Roll Call," was married in London, on the 11th inst., to Major Butler, author of the "Great Lone Land."

sands are thick around her; the final breaking up is only a question of very brief time; But the "term" is farther away than the leaders of the "outs" desire to reflect upon. Another session of parliament must be held at Ottawa before the battle for the treasury benches can be tried on a "foughten field."

There seems to be an impression abroad that Sir John is about to resign his leadership of the party and nominate Doctor Tupper to the post of honor. Of this there is not the slightest danger. Sir John is the head and front of the Conservative party whatever cohesion the party possess he is the ligament alone that binds the rickety elements together. Sir John is the Tory party, and the Tory party is Sir John. Dr. TUPPER is no more fitted to assume the leadership, then a blind baby is to steer a steamer through the perilous channel of the Long Sault. He is fluent of speech and that is all. But he is ambitious; in his Kingston speech he declares that "the Finance Minister was totally unfitted for the position he occupied" and left it to be inferred that he was the "man for Galway." Shades of Pluto! Dr. Tupper as Finance Minister! What next?

THE WAR NEWS.

TURKEY.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED TO BE RESPECTED

"In consequence of the demand of the Imperial Government for the substitution on our ambulance service of the red crescent for the red cross, doubts have been raised as to our intention respecting the Convention of Geneva. To remove any misunderstanding in this respect the Imperial Government declares that in conformity with the said Convention, to which it adheres in principle, the red cross will continue to be religiously respected by the Ottoman armies under all circumstances; the formal instructions have been given to this effect, and that the Society for Aid for the Wounded, represented by the red crescent, is in reality but the Eastern branch of the Society of the Red Cross."

A vessel about to discharge a cargo of a hundred and fifty bar els of gunpowder at Crete has been captured by Turkish war vessels.

Such uneasiness is felt at Constantinople concerning the state of Crete that six battalions are to be sent there, although much wanted elsewhere.

THE TURKISH DEFENCES.

One or two English officers of high rank who have just returned from rather a prolonged inspection of the Russian and Ottoman forces along the Danube have reported to the Commander-in-Chief that the Turkish positions are much stronger than is generally supposed, and that the Russian generals will have considerable difficulty before they fairly cross the river and establish themselves on the other side. The Russians are making the most determined efforts to bring up an overwhelming body for the attack along the Danube.

THE ATTITUDE OF ENGLAND.

The Foreign office has decided that any British officer in the service of a power which enters into hostilities against another power with which England is at peace, must resign either his foreign appointment or his commission in the British service.

At Woolwich dockyard there is placed in readiness for service a complete field apheavy woods and high hills with entrenchments. The Turks made four determined attacks, and were repulsed. The Montenegrins waited until the Turks advanced within two hundred yards, when they poured a deadly volley into the enemy's front. The Montenegrin horsemen then dashed forward and fell upon their front and flanks. The Turks halted and were attacked with the bayonet, causing a quick retreat, pursued by the Montenegrins, who killed the larger portion of the stragglers they overtook. The retreat soon became a rout, and 2,000 Turks were left dead along the road.

RUSSIAN.

The Russians have organized fifteen field hospitals, containing altogether 20,000 beds, to be distributed over Souman and adjoining districts. This provision for sick and wounded is thought sufficient for all emergencies.

The rafts which the Russians have been constructing below Galatz are quite ready for bridging, and a large number are being towed up to Ibraila. This quite supports the general opinion that a crossing will take place at Ghaicit, below Ibraila.

Sisters of Mercy, large numbers of whom recently arrived, are constantly visiting the camps and various hospitals, there are a good many sick, though the Russians do their utmost to prevent the attainment of any information on that subject.

Baron Krant, arrested as a Turkish spy at Ploesti, by the Russians, has not been shot.

The Russian proclamations in Armenia promise payment for necessities supplied the army, and severe punishment for soldiers who ill-treat villagers. This has produced a favourable impression.

BUTCHERIES.

It is reported that the Cossacks have captured Ardahan(?) and massacred 800 men, women, and children.

The recent defeat of 1,500 Circassians at Benkli Ahmed was due to their demanding to be led against the Russians. The latter came upon them suddenly, and 1,100 Circassians were killed. The fugitives butchered all the inhabitants of the surrounding villages whom they met, claiming that they had betrayed them to the Russians.

ARABS IN THE FIELD.

There has been a dangerous outbreak of from 15,000 to 20,000 mounted Arabs in the district between Damascus and Aleppo. The country is almost denuded of troops. The Governor of Syria has telegraphed for assistance, and until it reaches him the district will probably be given up to plunder. This probably is the disturbance reported in the Pera despatch of June 14. It was then stated that 32,000 rebel horsemen of the Bedouin tribes had been defeated by the Ottoman troops.

Constantinople despatches report that the Bashi-Bazouks are committing excesses around the suburbs. A sort of reign of terror exists. The suburbs are mostly occupied by the villas of the mercantile classes. An English army officer and an American naval officer were maltreated.

Hobart Pasha has positive orders to bombard Odessa. The Russians are placing torpedoes carefully for his reception.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JUNE, 22nd 1877.

THE SUMMER CAMPAIGN.

It would naturally be thought that the duplex head of the great Tory party, Sir John and the Doctor, after the arduous toils of the late session, after their herculean and heroic efforts to secure the salvation of the country—negatively at least—would be content to rest upon their oars, if not upon their laurels. By no manner of means; quite the contrary. The great work is not yet accomplished. The corrupt plebeian party of grits possesses still a disgusting degree of vitality. What little success—according alone to their own claim, has attended their efforts against the Mackenzie Administration has only "scotched the snake, not killed it" another effort is necessary to complete the victory. Still another blow must be struck; still a further and weary tramp along the via dolorosa of the cold shades of opposition, ere the welcome treasury benches invite them with open arms to their tempting embrace.

Without even laying aside for a breathing spell, their harness the political Siamese twins, Sir John Macdonald and Dr. Tupper have started out on their missionary tour. Last year, by a brilliant battery of bun-feeds they carried the outposts, the rural population; this year they take in their line of march the core of the country, the centres of population. Already in turn Kingston, London and Brampton have been visited or rather have been subjected to the infliction of the oft told tale. Over and over again have we heard the same wearisome iteration of misstatements the same reckless audacity of mendacity, the same threadbare slanders of ministers of the crown, the same distorted version of circumstances; the formal instructions have been given to this effect, and that the Society for Aid for the Wounded, represented by the red crescent, is in reality but the Eastern branch of the Society of the Red Cross.

A vessel allowed to discharge a cargo of a hundred and fifty barrels of gunpowder at Crete has been captured by Turkish war vessels.

Such uneasiness is felt at Constantinople concerning the state of Crete that six battalions are to be sent there, although much wanted elsewhere.

THE ATTITUDE OF ENGLAND.

The Foreign office has decided that any British officer in the service of a power which enters into hostilities against another power with which England is at peace, must resign either his foreign appointment or his commission in the British service.

At Woolwich dockyard there is placed in readiness for service a complete field equipment of tents, waggons, ambulances, medical stores, etc., for twenty-two regiments, with an immense reserve of stores only requiring a short period to be brought forward for use.

Earl Derby and the Marquis of Salisbury hold very opposite views regarding the Russian occupation of Constantinople. Lord Salisbury believes that Gortschakoff will not advise that the city be held for a long time. Lord Derby would at once inform Russia that she will only march there at the risk of meeting British as well as Turkish troops. Whatever be the truth about the reported dismissal, the Cabinet has taken certain military precautions. A large army corps is ready for immediate service and transports can be obtained.

Biernacki is strongly in favor of Gortschakoff's Note and entirely disapproves of the vague and uncertain attitude of England. According to most trustworthy reports received in Berlin Earl Derby does not intend for the present to reply to Gortschakoff's Note. The Czar complains of England throwing her moral influence on the side of Turkey, and thus encouraging the Porte to take action which would not be ventured upon but for the reliance placed placed on the ultimate aid of England. A prominent Russian official says the relations between Russia and England at present are of the most critical kind, short of actual war. The two countries stand on the very verge of hostilities, and the slightest incident might at any time precipitate a conflict. Count Schouvaloff, Russian Ambassador to England, is instructed to say explicitly that war would be preferable to the present uncertainty.

Gortschakoff, in his reply to England (as always) wish on the part of Russia to take possession of Constantinople, declares that city ought to belong to none of the European Powers. Count Schouvaloff is to assure England that the route to India by way of the Suez Canal and the Persian Gulf is free; that the treaties of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles will be settled at the end of the war by a European Congress. Beyond these points no engagement has been undertaken. The assertion that Russia will confine herself, at conclusion of the peace, to applying the resolutions adopted by the late Conference, is therefore incorrect.

POSITION OF THE COMBATANTS.

The Times correspondent at Bucharest telegraphs that the Russians and Turks have constructed strong batteries on the opposite shores of the Danube at Satur-

claiming that they had betrayed them to the Russians.

ARABS IN THE FIELD.

There has been a dangerous outbreak of from 15,000 to 20,000 mounted Arabs in the district between Damascus and Aleppo. The country is almost denuded of troops. The Governor of Syria has telegraphed for assistance, and until it reaches him the district will probably be given up to plunder. This probably is the disturbance reported in the Pera despatch of June 14. It was then stated that 12,000 rebel horsemen of the Bedouin tribes had been defeated by the Ottoman troops.

Constantinople despatches report that the Bashi-Bazouks are committing excesses around the suburbs. A sort of reign of terror exists. The suburbs are mostly occupied by the villas of the mercantile classes. An English army officer and an American naval officer were maltreated.

Hobart Pasha has positive orders to bombard Odessa. The Russians are placing torpedoes carefully for his reception.

THE OKA INDIANS.

CATHOLIC CHURCH BURNED, PRIESTS RESIDENCE, AND SEMINARY DESTROYED.

June 15.—The trouble at Oka were the prevalent topic of conversation in Montreal to-day. The facts are as follows:—The Seminary of St. Sulpice demanded that the Protestant Indians should remove a fence from across the road, near the village. The refusal, on the ground that it was enclosing their pasture, and that they had been allowed to place it of old. As the Seminary could make no agreement, the clergy laid information at Ste. Scholastique, and, on the warrants being issued, such was the feeling evinced among the Indians, that the authorities of the district called upon the Provincial Government for help. In response, seven policemen and a sergeant were sent up, and aided in arresting five out of the forty-five Indians for whom warrants were out. The rest of the Indians fled to the woods and remained concealed until the constables had left the village. When the Indians again came together their Chief, Joseph Onesakrenat, advised them to resist every further attempt to arrest them, and they armed themselves with such weapons as they could procure, rifles, shot guns, revolvers, and knives. The armament being completed at noon yesterday, from that time they patrolled the village and defied the priests and their people to lay a hand on them. Towards night many of them retired to their houses, while a few stood sentry.

June 15.—About four o'clock this morning Father Lucan, the priest at Oka, was awakened by the detonation of a cannon which had been loaded and moved by Indians from the river side to the back buildings of the seminary and fired. The effate was forbidden to move by an Indian who came to meet him, he discovered a fire in the stables in the rear of his house which had gained considerable headway. Thirty armed Indians promenade around the church and prevented any assistance being rendered by him and others. The people worked with great perseverance to extinguish the flames, but as there were no modern appliances on the spot their efforts were all in vain. The pumps had been destroyed so that it was impossible to use them. The priests had no guards, and many of the reverend gentlemen had gone to St. Scholastique. The few French inhabitants near by managed to save the convent. They also saved the oil paintings and ornaments of the church.

The church, the priest's residence and stables were in one building, and in less than two hours the whole structure was in ruins. Nothing remains but the walls, which are now beyond repair. The steeple, which contained three bells, fell with a tremendous crash. The marble church fixtures and valuables, with the priest's house furniture were saved, excepting the church organ and other fixtures, which could not be readily moved.

The markets cannot well be glutted with farm produce. The increasing migration will take up all the surplus such time as facilities exist for cheap transportation.

An industrious young man of a practical turn of mind with $1,000 dollars could do well on a farm here.

The smaller fruits do well. Apples have not yet been thoroughly tested. There is reason to believe the harvest will succeed.

There is no limitation as to the quality of half-breed scrip that any person purchase. No one person, however, purchase more than 640 acres of Government lands.—Winnipeg Free Press.

British Neutrality.

TEXT OF THE QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION IN CANADA.

OTTAWA, May 26.—The following published in the Official Gazette, together with the "Act to Regulate the Conduct of Her Majesty's Subjects during the Existence of Hostilities between Foreign States with which Her Majesty is at Peace."

"A PROCLAMATION."

"Whereas, we are happily at peace with all Sovereigns, Powers and States;

"Whereas, notwithstanding our most exertions to preserve peace between all Sovereigns, Powers and States a state of war unhappily exists between Her Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias and His Majesty the Emperor of Ottomans, and between their respective subjects and others inhabiting within their countries, territories or dominions;

"Whereas, we are on terms of friendship and amicable intercourse with each of these sovereigns, and with their respective subjects and others inhabiting within their countries, territories or dominions;

"Whereas, great numbers of loyal subjects reside, carry on commerce and possess property and establishments and enjoy various rights and privileges within the dominions of each of the said sovereigns, protected by the faith and treaties between us and each of the aforesaid sovereigns;

We therefore have thought fit by with the advice of our Privy Council, issue this, our royal proclamation, we do hereby strictly charge and command all our loving subjects to govern themselves accordingly, and to observe strict neutrality in and during the said war; and to abstain from violating or contravening either the laws or statutes of the realm in this behalf or laws of nations in relation thereto, they will answer to the contrary at their peril.

Russian Priests.

Russian priests are a disgrace to Christianity. "He has priests' eyes," is a proverb which means that the person characterized is lustful, greedy, and seeking. Moreover, they are, in a drunken nation, the most drunken. A friend mine, who stayed several months in a Russian country-house, says it was a common sight to see two priests lying in a cart, as pigs do when they are driven to market. One saint's day, he tells me, the priest came to chapel too far from the service; instead of being struck dumb with shame, he actually went out an apology: "We poor fellows spend all our time in praying for others, I have no one to pray for us; no wonder, therefore, we fall under temptation. Things are just as bad in Bulgaria; English engineer who has just written book of his experiences there, went one Sunday to attend a church, where "pope" had a great reputation for sanctity. There was no service, for the "pope" lying dead drunk among the nettles the back of his vodka (whiskey) sh. "I heard," quaintly adds the writer, "for the five previous Sundays his

It would naturally be thought that the duplex head of the great Tory party, Sir John and the Doctor, after the arduous toils of the late session, after their herculean and heroic efforts to secure the salvation of the country—negatively at least—would be content to rest upon their oars, if not upon their laurels. By no manner of means; quite the contrary. The great work is not yet accomplished. The corrupt plebeian party of grits possesses still a disgusting degree of vitality. What little success—according alone to their own claim, has attended their efforts against the Mackenzie Administration has only "scotched the snake, not killed it" another effort is necessary to complete the victory. Still another blow must be struck; still a further and weary tramp along the via dolorosa of the cold shades of opposition, ere the welcome treasury benches invite them with open arms to their tempting embrace.

Without even laying aside for a breathing spell, their harness the political Siamese twins, Sir John Macdonald and Dr. Tupper have started out on their missionary tour. Last year, by a brilliant battery of bun-feeds they carried the outposts, the rural population; this year they take in their line of march the core of the country, the centres of population. Already in turn: Kingston, London and Brampton have been visited or rather have been subjected to the infliction of the oft told tale. Over and over again have we heard the same wearisome iteration of misstatements the same reckless audacity of mendacity, the same threadbare slanders of ministers of the crown, the same distorted version of political events wrought by the Reform party; the same fulsome flood of mutual laudation of each other; the same self-glorification, of the illustrious chieftain and his deeds of "high emprise" in the days of "the government of which I was a member."

But why are these arcades ambo stumping the country at the present time? Is not their cause safe? Have not the political sins of the Mackenzie administration so heavily freighted the ship of state that the present pilots will, to save her from going on the rocks of destruction, be compelled to relinquish their litter into the hands of more competent men? The present course of the leaders of the Tory party shows that they have not the deepest faith in the boasted re-action we have heard so much about. To them evidently the golden goal of the right of the throne is still afar off; the day is yet distant when Dr. Tupper shall turn back his immaculate shirt bands and "spell" the Hon. Mr. Cartwright in the arduous task of manipulating the strings of the public purse.

The truth of the matter is, the Tory cause is going to the wall, and the party is in a sad plight when it must consent to be propped up by the flunty flabby platitudes of the "foremost Nova Scotian" when its highest trust is in "the refuge of lies, politically speaking, implied in the advocacy of the cause by the "Cumberland war horse" little faith have Sir John and the Doctor in the prediction of the Mail: "The ship is beginning to part her timbers; the shoals and quick-marsh there at the risk of meeting destruction as well as Turkish troops. Whatever be the truth about the reported disunion, the Cabinet has taken certain military precautions. A large army corps is ready for immediate service and transports can be obtained.

Bismarck is strongly in favor of Gortschakoff's Note and entirely disapproves of the vague and uncertain attitude of England. According to most trustworthy reports received in Berlin Earl Derby does not intend for the present to reply to Gortschakoff's Note. The Czar complains of England throwing her power of influence on the side of Turkey, and thus encouraging the Porte to take action which would not be ventured upon but for the reliance placed upon the ultimate aid of England. A prominent Russian official says the relations between Russia and England at present are of the most critical kind, short of actual war. The two countries stand on the very verge of hostilities, and the slightest incident might at any time precipitate a conflict. Count Scheravloff, Russian Ambassador to England, is instructed to say explicitly that war would be preferable to the present uncertainty.

Gortschakoff, in his reply to England disavows any wish on the part of Russia to take possession of Constantinople, declares that city ought to belong to none of the European Powers. Count Scheravloff is to assure England that the route to India by way of the Suez Canal and the Persian Gulf is free; that the treaties of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles will be settled at the end of the war by a European Congress. Beyond these points no engagement has been undertaken. The assertion that Russia will confine herself, at conclusion of the peace, to applying the resolutions adopted by the late Conference, is therefore incorrect.

POSITION OF THE COMBATANTS.

The Times' correspondent at Bucharest telegraphs that the Russians and Turks have constructed strong batteries on the opposite shores of the Danube at Salun and Isakchi where the Russians crossed in 1828. The immense mass of material which the Russians are moving toward the Danube can scarcely be lodged in the depots on the river before the 1st July. It is therefore scarcely probable that any attempt will be made to cross before that month and this supposition is strengthened by the present state of the Danube. The enemy will certainly be on the alert on account of the Czar's arrival at headquarters, and therefore instead of the Czar's arrival, is thought by some being an indication of immediate activity. It is much more probable that it will be allowed to lose its a weakening effect on the Turks, and that they will be suffered to relapse into their usual lethargic state. The correspondent adds: "I do not believe that the Russians will cross at the earliest moment practicable, but probably after the first alarm, when the activity aroused by their appearance in close proximity to the Danube has subsided."

THE SUEZ CANAL.

In the House of Commons to-day Sir Stafford Northcote stated that Russia's reply to England's intimation forbidding the exercise of belligerent rights in the Suez Canal, was to the effect that Russia would neither blockade, interrupt, nor menace the navigation of the canal in any manner. He added that replies from the Porte and Khedive to the British communications on the subject were not yet received.

A Constantinople despatch says the Porte refuses the request of England to neutralise the Suez canal.

TURKISH DEFEAT.

NEW YORK, June 18.—A Herald cable special says that Montenegrin spies watched the Turkish advance, numbering ten thousand, under Ali Sabir from Podgoritz toward Nisic. The Montenegrins chose a strong position in a defile flanked by steep rocky cliffs, and the Turkish divisions were out. The rest of the Indians fled to the woods and remained concealed until the constables had left the village. When the Indians again came together their Chief, Joseph Onesakenrat, advised them to resist every further attempt to arrest them, and they armed themselves with such weapons as they could procure, rifles, shot guns, revolvers, and knives. The armament being completed at noon yesterday, from that time they patrolled the village and defied the priests and their people to lay a hand on them. Towards night many of them retired to their houses, while a few stood sentry.

June 15.—About four o'clock this morning Father Lacan, the priest at Oka, was awakened by the detonation of a cannon which had been loaded and moved by Indians from the river side to the back buildings of the seminary and fired. The curate was forbidden to move by an Indian who came to meet him, he discovered a fire in the stables in the rear of his house which had gained considerable headway. Thirty armed Indians promenaded around the church and prevented any assistance being rendered by him and others. The people worked with great perseverance to extinguish the flames, but as there were no modern appliances on the spot their efforts were all in vain. The pumps had been destroyed so that it was impossible to use them. The priests had no guards, and many of the gentlemen had gone to St. Scholastique. The few French inhabitants near by managed to save the convent. They also saved the oil paintings and ornaments of the church.

The church, the priest's residence and stables were in one building, and in less than two hours the whole structure was in ruins. Nothing remains but the walls, which are now beyond repair. The steeple, which contained three bells, fell with a tremendous crash. The marble church fixtures and valuables, with the priest's house furniture were saved, excepting the church organ and other fixtures, which could not be readily moved. The granary, which contained about 1,000 bushels of grain the stables and coach house, with three valuable cows and carriages, are also a total loss. Strange to say the conservatory, which was surrounded by the burning building, escaped not, however, without the flowers inside being scorched. The library, which contained about 1,000 volumes, a number of which were in the Indian language, was consumed. The nunnery which is but a few yards off, escaped, fortunately, there being no wind. The church was 100 years old; and was 80 feet long by 35 feet wide. It had only recently been freshly frescoed and painted, and placed in thorough repair. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary, and a report is current that the Indians blew open (previous to the fire) the gates surrounding the church with a cannon, and that they still remain in the village, armed, but probably if such had been the case the church fixtures and valuables would not have been so readily saved. At noon to-day all was quiet. Loss $50,000 no insurance.

CAUSE OF THE INDIANS ARREST.

An Oka despatch to the Witness states that it was not till to-day that the charges on which the Indians were arrested were found out, a person having gone to Ste. Scholastique for that purpose. The charge on which the forty-six men were to have been brought to trial was two-fold—that on the 8th day of May they did illegally and maliciously cut, break, knock down, and destroy upon the domain of the gentlemen of the Seminary, 84 trees to the value of 50 cents each; and also that on the same day they did destroy thirteen arpents of tending upon the said domain. In short, the Indians used 84 trees in repairing and replacing the fence around their pasture.

"Whereas, great numbers of loyal subjects reside, carry on commerce and possess property and establishments and enjoy various rights and privilege within the dominions of each of the aforesaid sovereigns, protected by the faith and treaties between us and each of the aforesaid sovereigns.

Is any wonder the Turks look on a religion which has such teachers as fitter for swine than for man?—All the Year Round.

Medical Mission to the Nor-west.

The Government at Ottawa have appointed Dr. Haggarty, of this city, as the London Free Press, as Medical Superintendent for the Nor-West Territories specially charged with the duty of vaccinating the Indian population there. The ravages of small-pox among the Indian tribes are peculiarly severe, and the disease appearing to acquire new force after having come in contact with any members of those portions of the race. The efforts about to be made to introduce the palliating expedient of vaccination are eminently judicious, and the selection of Dr. Haggarty as Medical Superintendent for the purpose of carrying them into effect is a very good one. Dr. Haggarty has been a medical practitioner in London during the past nine years—during which time he has enjoyed a marked success. He expects to leave London on his Medical mission about the 29th inst. He has already supplied himself with sufficient lymph with which to vaccinate 2,500 persons and he will expect soon to hear that he has active entered upon his humanitarian duties.

BELLVILLE, June 13.—The grave Mrs. Cross, wife of Richard Cross, Tweed, who was buried in the Methodist burial ground at that place on Monday was desecrated by some unknown person on the same night. The body had been disinterred and part of the entrails removed and the remains reburied. The body was exhumed by the friends, while the above facts were made clear. Several parties in the village are suspected of the outrage.

Capt. Perry's Company left on Monday for Bath, to go through with their annual drill.

Rain.

We had a heavy thunder shower on Wednesday night, and steady rain all through Thursday, which will surely satisfy every agriculturist in our vicinity.

Cat-Fish Extrordinary.

Two large Channel Cats weighing, over 30 lbs, each were caught with a line and hook at Unger's Island, by Nelson Sugar, on Monday night.

Current Worms.

A practical gardner informs us that current worms may be destroyed by a solution of one pound of copperas dissolved in a pint of water, applied with a sprinkler. It never fails.

School Section Enlargement.

The committee appointed to adjust the matter, regarding the enlargement of S. E. No. 16 Ernestown, will meet at the Judges Chambers on Tuesday 26th inst., at 10 o'clock.

Strawberries and Cream.

A Bazaar and Strawberry Festival is announced by the ladies of St. Mary Magdalene's Church, in the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 27th inst.

A Successful Operation.

Was performed on the eyes of Mr. W. E. Baker, by Dr. Stewart, oculist at Belleville, by which a case of cross-eyes of sixteen years standing, was effectually cured.

The Tichenborne House.

One of our oldest and most popular hotels was closed on Monday. Business has been slack since the advent of Dunkin, which may account, in a measure, for the closing.

Dressmaking.

We call attention to Miss Amey's advertisement. Her improved self-fitting chart, will enable anyone to do their own dressmaking and, prove of great value to ladies who wish to retrench in household expenses.

Removal.

The Rev. W. S. Blackstock of the C. M. Church, is to be located at St. Johns, Que., a town of 7,000 inhabitants, on the river Richelieu, on the G. T. R., 26 miles from Montreal. Mr. B. has made himself very popular, and the best wishes of the community go with him.

Personal.

Mr. Robt. Downey paid us a visit on Monday last. He is on a prospecting tour through Canada in connection with the grain business. Messrs. Downey & Bros., will deal heavily in grain during the fall, and Mr. Robt. Downey, in Oswego, will select the best markets in which to sell to advantage.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

JUNE SESSION—FIRST DAY.

The County Council for Lennox & Addington, assembled on Tuesday, June 12th, assembled Present—the Warden, Bell (J. W.), Bell, (W. A.), Coulter, Dufoe, Davis, Hain, Herring, Hornick, Joyner, Lane, Madden, Miller, Parrott, Paul, Price, Storr, Wood.

Minutes of last session read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From J. Bartlett & Co., dealers in iron bridges, etc., Toronto, asking the number of bridges in the county and also the address of the county engineer. Referred to committee on roads and bridges.

From the County Clerk of Simcoe, requesting the co-operation of the council in petitioning the Ontario Government for copies of the consolidated statutes. Referred to special committee consisting of Messrs. Bell (W. A.), Hain and Parrott.

From the Ontario School of Agriculture, asking the council to nominate a pupil for said school, laid on the table.

ACCOUNTS.

From Henry & Bro., stationary for court house offices, $42.36.

Mr. Storr said, he believed that a large portion of it was used in criminal justice business, and the county had no right to pay for it. Therefore he moved, seconded by Mr. Aylsworth. That the account be referred to the Board of Audit, to ascertain what items the county was responsible for.

Mr. Bell, as a member of the board, was unprepared to speak intelligently on the matter, and it was agreed to lay it over till morning.

T. H. Waller, repairs and jail supplies, $44.64. Boyle & Wright, snow shovel, etc., 68c. Downey & Spence, jail supplies, $26.25. Referred to County Property committee.

PETITIONS.

From David McHenry and others, Richmond, for a grant of money to put in proper repair the road on the boundary line between Thornhill and Richmond.

mond, was referred to the committee on Roads and Bridges.

A motion of Mr. Hornick, seconded by Mr. Paul, to grant $250 to Kalendar at Anglessea, similarly referred.

Council adjourned for the convenience of committees.

THIRD DAY—THURSDAY.

All members present.

The report of the special committee on the communication of the county clerk, Simcoe in reference to the consolidated statutes stated that as the governments were already in possession of the fact action was unnecessary. Report adopted.

ANSELSTINE'S HILL.

The special committee appointed yesterday to inspect this work, reported that they had measured the excavations at found that thirty-six feet in length, twenty-three feet in breadth, and two feet in depth, had been taken from the bro of the hill. The bridge has been raised too high, rendering an extra amount grading necessary. The committee could not recommend any further grant and thought that if the contractor followed their suggestions, the amount yet to be expended would make it a good job. Report adopted.

PETITIONS.

The petition of E. A. Spencer and others, for a special grant of $100 on the Richmond road, to improve Grievess' hill was referred to committee on Roads and Bridges.

COUNTY GAS.

The report of the committee on County Property stated in reference to gas for the county building, that the cost of piping would be, for the court house $187; jail, $49.40; registry office, $22.4. Total, $258.80.

Mr. Aylsworth moved, seconded by Mr. Paul, that the report, be laid over for consideration till the December session.

An amendment to go into Committee of the Whole on the report, having been lost, the yeas and nays were taken on the original motion as follows: Yeas—Aylsworth, Coulter, Dufoe, Davis, Hornick, Joyner, Lane, Parrott, Paul and Wood—10. Nays—Bell (J. W.), Bell, (W. A.), Doffer, Hain, Herring, Miller, Price, Storr and Wright—9.

COUNTY ROAD.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), introduced a by-law to assume the road leading from the Ernestown, Camden and Sheffield county road, from the intersection of said road, on the concession line between the second and third concessions of Camden, westerly to the boundary of the village of Newburgh, said road to be called the Camden and Newburgh county road. A motion to go into the second reading of the by-law was lost.

On motion the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to decide in reference to the petition of Messrs. Robertson and others, to change the boundaries of S. E. No. 16, Ernestown. Messrs. Doffer, Davis, Paul, Jud, Wilkie and Inspector Burrows.

The application of Mrs. George, for a step ladder, was referred to committee on County Property, with power to act.

COUNTY COURT AND GENERAL SESSIONS.

The Court continued Tuesday, 12th inst. The Grand Jury presented their report as follows, which was sent to the County Council then in session.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

We, the Grand Jury, of our sovereign lady the Queen, at the General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Lennox and Addington, beg leave to congratulate your honor on the excellent health

Judges Chambers on Tuesday 26th inst., at 10 o'clock.

Lamp Explosions.

A cotemporary says:—It is not generally known, but should be, that a handful of flour thrown on burning oil will quench the flames instantly. The next time you have a lamp explosion try the experiment and see how like a charm it will work. It is well worth remembering.

More Incendiarism.

On Wednesday night another attempt was made to burn Mr. Peter Bogart's building. The fire was kindled against the outside cellar door and then covered with a trap door in order to hide it. At 11:30 it was discovered and distinguished. This is the fourth attempt to burn Mr. Bogart's residence.

Bay of Quinte Navigation Co.

A meeting of the Bay of Quinte and Oswego Navigation Company was held Tuesday morning, when Mr. E. W. Rathbun, of Mill Point, resigned the Presidency, which he had held since the formation of the Company. Mr. Charles Allison, of Oswego, was elected to the position vacated by Mr. Rathbun.

Where are our Police.

On Saturday night some party hacked and cut Mr. T. H. Waller's shutters, which had just been newly grained, thereby causing additional inconvenience and expense. Messrs. Deiler & Scott's plate glass window has also been scratched by a diamond or some similar instrument. Such acts are mostly the result of thoughtlessness, and if detected, a little, moral suasion, of the right stamp will generally effect a cure.

Checkers Match Game.

A game of draughts was played between Mr. J. Davis Miller of Napanee, and Mr. R. B. Shaver of Bath, at the residence of Mr. N. Ham, for a wager of $25. Mr. Miller won the first game in 14 minutes, 2nd, a draw. 3rd, Miller in 35 minutes. 4th, Shaver 15 minutes. 5th, Miller 25 minutes. 6th, Miller 10 minutes. Mr. Miller, who is one of the best players in the Dominion, winning four out of six.

Great Fire.

"As we go to Press we read the following:—St. John N. B. in flames. Two others for plankwalk on south side of Dundas st. from Union Bakery to Empey's blacksmith shop. Recommend a 6 ft. plankwalk from Union Bakery to Robert st. thence crossing from Robert st. to intersection of plankwalk, to be 11 ft wide. Estimated cost $99.50.

13th. From Jas. Carscallen and others, and Robt. Dennison and others, for drains on Centre st. We ask further time to report, until levels can be taken.

14th. From Jno. Gibbard and others, plank walk on Centre st. north of Thomas st. Recommend to be built. Cost, $30.

15th. From Jno. E. Clark and others, to have Union st. graded. Ask further time to report.

16th. From Jas. G. Chatterton and others, to have Mill st. from Richard st put in a good state of repair and made passable. Recommend that $50 be granted, to be used advantageously.

17th. From Jno. Dooce and others, Plank walk S. side of Bridge st. from Centre st. about 150 feet. Recommend a 6 ft. walk. Cost $22.50.

18th. From S. W. Bartles and others, drain on east side of Centre st. south side of river. Not recommended.

20th. From Thos. Scott and others, plankwalk from Covered Bridge, Kingston road to Newburgh road, and along the latter. Recommend a new plankwalk 6 ft. wide, from corner, Kingston and Newburgh road, and across the Palace grounds, and to repair the old plankwalk as far as it runs at present. Respecting the laying of plankwalk from Covered Bridge, your Committee consulted with the Committee from the Agricultural Association. The two Committees have agreed to build a plankwalk 6 ft. wide, and remove the fence—each corporation bearing equal expenses; which we re-adopted. Costs $163.30.

Moved by Lane, seconded by Carscallen, that Report be taken up coriatim. Carried.

On motion the Council went into a committee of the whole on the consideration of the Report. Mr. Geddes in the chair.

1st. clause. Moved by Lane seconded by McNeill that 1st clause be adopted. Moved in amendment by Roe, seconded by James, the we first take up sidewalks now in existence, which is necessary for the Council to rebuild, and we then take up the question of new sidewalks—Original motion carried.

2nd. Moved by McNeill, seconded by Carscallen, that second clause be adopted. Carried.

3rd. Moved by McNeill, seconded by Carscallen, that the third clause be adopted.

The County Council for Lennox & Addington, assembled on Tuesday, June 12th, assembled Present—the Warden, Bell (J. W.), Bell, (W. A.), Coulter, Dufoe, Davis, Ham, Herring, Hornick, Joyner, Lane, Madden, Miller, Parrott, Paul, Price, Storr, Wood.

Minutes of last session read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From J. Bartlett & Co., dealers in iron bridges, etc., Toronto, asking the number of bridges in the county and also the address of the county engineer. Referred to committee on roads and bridges. From the County Clerk of Simcoe, requesting the co-operation of the council in petitioning the Ontario Government for copies of the consolidated statutes. Referred to special committee consisting of Messrs. Bell (W. A.), Ham and Parrott. From the Ontario School of Agriculture, asking the council to nominate a pupil for said school, laid on the table.

ACCOUNTS.

From Henry & Bro., stationary for court house offices, $42.36.

Mr. Storr said, he believed that a large portion of it was used in criminal justice business, and the county had no right to pay for it. Therefore he moved, seconded by Mr. Aylsworth. That the account be referred to the Board of Audit, to ascertain what items the county was responsible for.

T. H. Waller, repairs and jail supplies, $44.61. Boyle & Wright, snow shovel, etc., 68c. Downey & Spence, jail supplies, $26.25. Referred to County Property committee.

PETITIONS.

From Daniel McHenry and others, Richmond, for a grant of money to put in proper repair the road on the boundary line between Tyndinaga and Richmond, along lot number one, in the fourth and fifth concessions.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), inquired if the county was responsible jointly with Hastings for repairs to boundary roads, or should the matter be attended to by the township authorities.

Mr. Storr said that the county had a joint jurisdiction with adjoining counties. Hastings was prepared to make an equal expenditure. The bad state of the road diverted trade from Napanee to Belleville.

From Benjamin Briscoe and others, asking the council to consider the state of the road between Ernestown and the two Fredericksburgs, south of the Kingston road to the bay shore, and praying for and appropriation of $200.

A petition presented by Mr. Paul, that $150 be granted to repair the boundary between Portland and Camden townships, on condition that Frontenac grant a like amount. The above petitions were referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

From the ratepayers of School Section No. 16, Ernestown, praying the council to add certain lots to their section, which was too small to maintain a school according to statutory requirements, as the township council had refused to take action in the matter.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), moved, seconded by Mr. ———, that the Warden be appointed to act with the County Judge and the P. S. Inspector, to investigate and report upon the matter till Thursday.

The Warden referred the consideration of $1.80 paid by him, costs in the matter of a settlement with E. Vine, to the council.

Council adjourned till ten o'clock tomorrow, for the convenience of the committee on Equalization of Assessment.

SECOND DAY—WEDNESDAY.

Council met at 10 A. M.

All the members present.

BEAVER LAKE.

(From our Special)

MR. EDITOR.—To meet 'Ego's' wish your last, I am up to my post, yet up, I do not find much to do.

Nothing strange occurred around Lake during last week to my knowledge unless it was, that the Rev. Mr. V of Tamworth preached a very interesting sermon on Wednesday evening at a Lake School House.

Everyone is busy packing stone

11:30 it was discovered and distinguished. This is the fourth attempt to burn Mr. Bogart's residence.

Bay of Quinte Navigation Co.

A meeting of the Bay of Quinte and Oswego Navigation Company was held Tuesday morning, when Mr. E. W. Rathbun, of Mt. Point, resigned the Presidency, which he had held since the formation of the Company. Mr. Charles Allison, of Oswego, was elected to the position vacated by Mr. Rathbun.

Where are our Police.

On Saturday night some party hacked and cut Mr. T. H. Waller's shutters, which had just been newly grained, thereby causing additional inconvenience and expense. Messrs. Decker & Scott's plate glass window has also been scratched by a diamond or some similar instrument. Such acts are mostly the result of thoughtlessness, and if detected, a little, moral suasion, of the right stamp will generally effect a cure.

Checkers Match Game.

A game of draughts was played between Mr. Davis Miller of Napanee, and Mr. R. B. Shaver of Bath, at the residence of Mr. N. Ham, for a wager of $25. Mr. Miller won the first game in 14 minutes, 2nd, a draw, 3rd, Miller in 35 minutes. 4th, Shaver 15 minutes. 5th, Miller 25 minutes. 6th, Miller 10 minutes. Mr. Miller, who is one of the best players in the Dominion, winning four out of six.

Great Fire.

"As we go to Press we read the following:—St. John, N. B. in flames. Two hundred acres of the city swept clear. Hundreds of buildings burned. Public buildings, banks, churches, and warehouses destroyed. Seven lives lost. All the wholesale and most of the retail houses gone. Estimated loss $15,000,000. Thousands of people homeless and with out food or clothing. The fire still raging. The fire broke out at half past two on Wednesday afternoon.

Potato Beetles.

A Globe correspondent says his gardener was afraid of Paris green, the year before last, and used black hellebore instead which killed all the beetles. Last year he used white hellebore, which had no effect, but this year he has again applied the black and found it as effective as before. The Lindsay Post says:—"A large black bug has made its appearance in this county, its mission evidently being to destroy the potato bug and not to interfere with the plants. It has destroyed nearly all the bugs in this section.

Base Ball Match.

A prize of $20, is to be given by the town of Bath to the winners of a match to be played in that place on the 2nd of July, between the Silver Leafs of Napanee, and the Dufferins of Bath. Our boys have received no word from the Troublers. They are making arrangements to play a match in Tamworth on the 12th of July. The silver medal is still held by the Leafs. In regard to the proposed Newburgh match, Mr. Pappin of the Reporter, who was in town on Wednesday, assures us that the Leafs would be most hospitably received.

Holiday Excursion.

On Tuesday next, the 26th inst., an Excursion train passes through Napanee at 11 a.m. It has every accommodation in the way of Pullman, smoking, and refreshment cars, and stops at all small stations. Return tickets, good for ten days (inclusive) can be had at the ticket agencies in the town, or aboard the train for $2.75. Arriving in Toronto at 4 p.m. where arrangements have been made for cheap rates, at the principle hotels. The next morning, the Empress of India starts for the Falls of Niagara, where the hotels have reduced their rates, and excursionists will also be admitted to all places of interest around the Falls at half the usual price of admission.

Plank walk S. side of Centre st. about 150 feet. (Recommend a 6 ft. walk. Cost $22.50)

18th. From S. W. Bartles and others, drain on east side of Centre st. south side of river. Not recommended.

20th. From Thos. Scott and others, plankwalk from Covered Bridge, Kingston road to Newburgh road, and along the latter. Recommend a new plankwalk 6 ft. wide, from corner, Kingston and Newburgh road, and across the Palace grounds, and to repair the old plankwalk as far as it runs at present. Respecting the laying of plankwalk from Covered Bridge, your Committee consulted with the Committee from the Agricultural Association. The two Committees have agreed to build a plankwalk 6 ft. wide, and remove the fence—each corporation bearing equal expenses; which we recommend. Costs $163.30

From Benjamin Briscoe and others, asking the council to consider the state of the road between Ernesttown and the two Fredericksburgs, south of the Kingston road to the bay shore, and praying for and appropriation of $200.

A petition presented by Mr. Paul, that $150 be granted to repair the boundary between Portland and Camden townships, on condition that Frontenac grant a like amount. The above petitions were referred to Roads and Bridges committee.

From the ratepayers of School Section No. 16, Ernesttown, praying the council to add certain lots to their section, which was too small to maintain a school according to statutory requirements, as the township council had refused to take action in the matter.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), moved, seconded by Mr. —, that the Warden be appointed to act with the County Judge and the P. S. Inspector, to investigate and report upon the matter till Thursday.

The Warden referred the consideration of $1.80 paid by him, costs in the matter of a settlement with E. Vine, to the council.

Council adjourned till ten o'clock tomorrow, for the convenience of the committee on Equalization of Assessment.

SECOND DAY—WEDNESDAY.

Council met at 10 A. M.
All the members present.

ASSELSTINE'S HILL, CAMDEN.

On motion, carried, Mr. McDonnell was heard before the council in reference to the cutting down of Asselstine's Hill, Capuden. The bridge had been raised three feet, but the amount of dirt and rock to make the approaches level, could not be supplied from the brow of the hill, the money, was nearly exhausted, he suggested the appointment of a special committee to examine, and report, as to the advisability of making further expenditure. The good state of the road would be an advantage to Napanee.

A motion by Mr. Joyner to appoint Messrs. Paul, Storr, Miller, Davis and the mover, a committee to examine the work at Asselstine's Hill and report, the motion was lost.

Mr. Joyner demanded the yeas and nays: Yeas—Messrs. Bell (J. W.), Bell (W. A.), Coulter, Dafeo, Ham, Hornick, Joyner, Lane, Paul and Storr—11; Nays—Messrs. Aylsworth, Davis, Herring, Parrott, Price, Wood and Wright—7. Motion declared carried.

JURY'S REPORT.

The report of the Grand Jury of the General Sessions of the Peace, was brought up, read and referred to the committee on Country Property.

EXAMINERS.

On motion of Mr. Bell (W. A.) seconded by Mr. Hornick, Rev. J. J. Bogert, Messrs. H. M. Derocle, Matheson and Duffand were re-appointed members of the Board of Examiners.

ACCOUNTS.

The account of J. R. Pruyn, jail supplies, and petition of E. E. Anderson, who prayed to have the loss of $98.46 made good, sustained by the rise of potatoes and bread, were referred to committee on County Property.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), said that the account of Henry & Bro., referred to him yesterday as a member of the Board of Audit, was one for which the county alone was responsible. It was referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

Mr. Storr presented the account of the municipality of Richmond, for materials and labor in repairing Selby bridge, on the Napanee and Sheffield road, $81.45. Referred to committee on Roads and Bridges.

A motion of Mr. Dafeo, seconded by Mr. Storr, to grant $100 to repair Leno Lake and used as a boundary road between Hastings and Lennox & Addington, situated in northwest corner of Rich-

MR. EDITOR.—To meet 'Ego's' wish your last, I am up to my post, yet w up, I do not find much to do.

Nothing strange occurred around Lake during last week to my knowledge unless it was, that the Rev. Mr. Will of Tamworth preached a very interesting sermon on Wednesday evening at Lake School House.

Everyone is busy picking stone (s) mer following, sowing buckwheat, or l ing potatoes and corn, some are fishing pleasure-sailing on the Lake. The cr look very favourable.

The scholars are busy at school, our popular teacher, Miss Huyek busy at her post preparing her pupils their local examination. All are at w while it is day. 'Ego' said, the poi bungs were very numerous, and I fin is right, a friend says they are marl west—all speed to them, perhaps t are recruiting for the conflict.

Beaver Lake is not without its att tions. There is plenty of hunting, fishing, and if more generally and fa ably known, and easily access, w be a centre of attraction to many a ne dged couple, wishing to spend t honeymoon amid our unbragous gro and by the shores of our placid Lak "away from the busy launts of men." make this announcement in hope hearing of a fitting response before season is over—but don't all come once.

Minutes of last session read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From J. Bartlett & Co., dealers in iron bridges, etc., Toronto, asking the number of bridges in the county and also the address of the county engineer. Referred to committee on roads and bridges. From the County Clerk of Simcoe, requesting the co-operation of the council in petitioning the Ontario Government for copies of the consolidated statutes. Referred to special committee consisting of Messrs. Bell (W. A.), Ham and Parrott. From the Ontario School of Agriculture, asking the council to nominate a pupil for said school, laid on the table.

ACCOUNTS.

From Henry & Bro., stationary for court house offices, $42.36.

Mr. Storr said, he believed that a large portion of it was used in criminal justice business, and the county had no right to pay for it. Therefore he moved, seconded by Mr. Aylsworth. That the account be referred to the Board of Audit, to ascertain what items the county was responsible for.

Mr. Bell, as a member of the board, was unprepared to speak intelligently on the matter, and it was agreed to lay it over till morning.

T. H. Waller, repairs and jail supplies, $44.61. Boyle & Wright, snow shovel, etc., 68c. Downey & Spence, jail supplies, 26.25. Referred to County Property committee.

PETITIONS.

mond, was referred to the committee on Roads and Bridges.

A motion of Mr. Hornick, seconded by Mr. Paul, to grant $250 to Kaladar and Anglesen, similarly referred.

Council adjourned for the convenience of committees.

THIRD DAY—THURSDAY.

All members present.

The report of the special committee on the communication of the county clerk of Simcoe in reference to the consolidated statutes stated that as the government were already in possession of the facts, action was unnecessary. Report adopted.

ASELSTINE'S HILL.

The special committee appointed yesterday to inspect this work, reported that they had measured the excavations and found that thirty-six feet in length, twenty-three feet in breadth, and two feet in depth, had been taken from the brow of the hill. The bridge has been raised too high, rendering an extra amount of grading necessary. The committee could not recommend any further grant, and thought that if the contractor followed their suggestions, the amount yet to be expended would make it a good job. Report adopted.

PETITIONS.

The petition of E. A. Spencer and others, for a special grant of $100 on the Richmond road, to improve Grieves' hill, was referred to committee on Roads and Bridges.

COUNTY GAS.

The report of the committee on County Property stated in reference to gas for the county building, that the cost for piping would be, for the court house, $107; jail, $49.40; registry office, $22.40 Total, $238.80.

Mr. Aylsworth moved, seconded by Mr. Paul, that the report, be laid over for consideration till the December session.

An amendment to go into Committee of the Whole on the report, having been lost, the yeas and nays were taken on the original motion as follows: Yeas—Aylsworth, Coulter, Dufoe, Davis, Hornick, Joyner, Lane, Parrott, Paul and Wood—10. Nays—Bell (J. W.), Bell, (W. A.), Doller, Ham, Herring, Miller, Price, Storr and Wright—9.

COUNTY ROAD.

Mr. Bell (J. W.), introduced a by-law to assume the road leading from the Ernestown, Camden and Sheffield county road, from the intersection of said road, on the concession line between the second and third concessions of Camden, westerly to the boundary of the village of Newburgh, said road to be called the Camden and Newburgh county road. A motion to go into the second reading of the by-law was lost.

On motion the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to decide in reference to the petition of Messrs. Robertson and others, to change the boundaries of S. S. No. 16, Ernestown: Messrs. Doller, Davis, Paul, Judge Wilkie and Inspector Burrows.

The application of Mrs. George, for a step ladder, was referred to committee on County Property, with power to act.

COUNTY COURT AND GENERAL SESSIONS.

The Court continued Tuesday, 12th inst. The Grand Jury presented their report as follows, which was sent to the County Council then in session.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

We, the Grand Jury, of our sovereign lady the Queen, at the General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Lennox and Addington, beg leave to congratulate your honor on the excellent health

IN MEMORIAM.

Yes, oh it's true! What now to me is said, George Kirk's is gone: He is numbered with the dead.

His lifeless body doth lie, Faded and pale, as is the withering flower, When the bleak wind lays waste the naked bow, Thus man is doomed to die.

This voice to me, it has a solemn sound, And seems to say, to every age around, Prepare to meet your God: The dreaded hour will come, when ye shall die, Perhaps it is the one, that now goes by, Prepare to meet your God.

So suddenly, we may as mortals fall, The solemn summons, is addressed to all, Prepare to meet your God: His dearest friends, are yet to be called to go, Without delay, do seek God's grace, that so Prepared, to meet your God.

NO RISK.

Thomas' Electric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE THROAT. One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUG. One or two bottles cures bad cases of PILES and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK OF YEARS' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of Six of the BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

Beware of Imitations.—Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, Ont., Proprietors for the Dominion.

L. H. Waller, repairs and jail supplies, $61. Boyle & Wright, snow shovel, $68. Downey & Sience, jail supplies, $25. Referred to County Property committee.

PETITIONS.
From David McHenry and others, husband, for a grant of money to put proper repair the road on the boundary between Tyndinaga and Richmond, as lot number one, in the fourth and fifth concessions.

Dr. Bell (J. W.), inquired if the county was responsible jointly with Hastings for the boundary roads, or should the latter be attended to by the township authorities.

Mr. Storr said that the county had a jurisdiction with adjoining counties. It was prepared to make an equal endowment. The bad state of the road erected trade from Napanee to Belle.

From Benjamin Briscoe and others, asking the council to consider the state of the road between Ernestown and the Fredericksburgs, south of the King's road to the bay shore, and praying appropriation of $200.

The road to the road would be an advantage to Napanee.

A motion by Mr. Joyner to appoint Messrs. Paul, Storr, Miller, Davis and a mover, a committee to examine the work at Asselstine's Hill and report, the motion was lost.

Mr. Joyner demanded the yeas and nays—Yeas—Messrs. Bell W. A. Bell

Ernestown, Camden and Sheffield county road, from the intersection of said roads on the concession line between the second and third concessions of Camden, westerly to the boundary of the village of Newburgh, said road to be called the Camden and Newburgh county road. A motion to go into the second reading of the by-law was lost.

On motion the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to decide in reference to the petition of Messrs. Robertson and others, to change the boundaries of S. S. No. 16, Ernestown: Messrs. Doffer, Davis, Paul, Judge Wilkinson and Inspector Burrows.

The application of Mrs. George, for a step ladder, was referred to committee on County Property, with power to act.

COUNTY COURT AND GENERAL SESSIONS.

The Court continued Tuesday, 12th inst. The Grand Jury presented their report as follows, which was sent to the County Council then in session.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

We, the Grand Jury, of our sovereign lady the Queen, at the General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Lennox and Addington, beg leave to congratulate your honor on the excellent health you enjoy, and which permits you to so efficiently discharge the duties which devolve upon you, and we sincerely wish that you may long continue to discharge your judicial duties in the same health and strength. We thank your honor for the congratulations contained in your charge, and hope that the same freedom from crime which now exists may long continue.

In accordance with our duty we have examined the County jail and find it kept in a clean and neat manner, and we commend the jailor for his careful attention to the duties of the prisoners. We think that an extra grate in each of Wards Nos. 3 and 4, for the greater security of the prisoners, is necessary.

All of which is respectfully submitted
(Signed) GEO. D. HAWLEY.

June 13th, 1877.

The remainder of the business transacted is as follows:

GENGE vs. HOSKINS.—Action to recover value of piano which the plaintiff bought from defendant's daughter and left at defendant's house, who seized and sold it for rent. Verdict for plaintiff by consent for $100. For plaintiff, Deroche & Madden; for defendant, Reeve & Morden.

PETERS vs. SNIDER.—The parties had traded horses, Peter getting a colt, and Snider an old mare, which he returned to Peter's stable and took away the colt. Verdict for defendant. Reeve & Morden for plaintiff; Britton & Price for defendant.

BEAVER LAKE

(From our Special)

Mr. Editor.—To meet 'Ego's' wish in your last, I am up to my post, yet while up, I do not find much to do.

Nothing strange occurred around the Lake during last week to my knowledge unless it was, that the Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Tamworth preached a very interesting sermon on Wednesday evening at the Lake School House.

Everyone is busy picking stone (summer following), sowing buckwheat, or hoeing potatoes and corn, some are fishing, or pleasure sailing on the Lake. The crops look very favourable.

The scholars are busy at school, and our popular teacher, Miss Huycke, is busy at her post preparing her pupils for their local examination. All are at work while it is day. 'Ego' said, the potato bugs were very numerous, and I find he is right, a friend says they are marching west—all speed to them, perhaps they are recruiting for the conflict.

Beaver Lake is not without its attractions. There is plenty of hunting and fishing, and if more generally and favorably known, it would be a great asset if access, would

T. J. B. HENDERSON, BOSTON, U.S.A.

FIVE YEARS' DISCOVERY OF THE NATURE OF CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY. This is the first discovery, made in the history of the world, that there are any known cures of the disease of CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH. I wish to inform you what it is, and how it is cured. I am 35 years old, and have been of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit. I had become so weak and unable to do any work at a time. I had severe nervousness and pain under the shoulder blades, and through the shoulders, with very intense and a feeling of weightiness as though there was a weight leading down with continual dripping to the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which cured my pain and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery is entirely due to your Catarrh Remedy, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,
T. J. B. HENDERSON.

An Old and Excellent Custom.

Years ago the fathers of well-to-do families in New England made it a point to see that every son was instructed in some trade, calling or profession by which he could gain a living. In those days it was very much against a young man that he grew up in idleness and without learning some branch of industry which would be useful to the community.

But this excellent custom has gradually passed away until it is now comparatively rare that boys in New England families in moderate circumstances serve an apprenticeship and become skillful mechanics. So large a number work their way into the professions that the supply is in excess of the demand; but the great mass, if called upon to name any avocation by which they feel sure they could gain a living, would be puzzled to point it out.—They trust to luck for something to turn up which they can do. They are content with most any employment which will afford them a living and allow them to wear good clothes and keep their hands soft and white. There is, too, a prevalent idea among sensible parents who have sustained a respectable reputation and accumulated a snug little property as mechanics and farmers, that they have improved the station in life of their sons if they have been able to push them into some employment which is free from manual labor. That there never was a more pernicious sentiment many be fully realized by taking a survey of the business and industrial condition of the country. For these light avocations where no trade is necessary, or clerkships, agencies and public offices, it is safe to say that there are hundreds of applicants to one opportunity for employment. Trade is overdone, stores are crowded with young men who have no trades, all sorts of offices, public and private, are thronged with young men eager for an opportunity to earn a living, scores are looking to catch the dollar that some other person has earned and the street corners in city and village are crowded with Micawbers, waiting for something to turn up whereby they can get a living but in ordinary times, for the higher grades of mechanical employment, where skill is required, there is a scarcity of men with intelligence, energy and brains. A short time since a manufacturer advertised for skilled workmen in a certain industry, but of one hundred applicants but two or three men were really skillful and qualified to meet the demand. But while the manufacturer was unable to find the trained men that he wanted, the country was full of young men drifting aimlessly about, waiting for something to happen which would afford them money with which to buy bread.

We complain of business depression, but when we look about us the wonder is that it is not greater, there are such crowds of men to be supported who add no value to produce of field, mill or mine, and yet have to be fed and clothed, however poorly from the results of those who do labor. The enforced idleness of to-day is partially due to the incapacity of those out of employment to engage in the higher departments of mechanical labor. There are in this country thousands of men who will be forced to be idle until light, genteel and simple avocations are furnished for one class, and until cities set to building parks on such a scale as will afford employment for that large class of men whose capacity for labor tends only to the use of a pick and shovel.

There are several causes which have united to produce the change referred to, but two are more prominent than the others. One of these is the notion which prevails (yet no one will confess that he or she is so silly to entertain it) that mechanical pursuits are not entirely respectable, or if respectable, they are not genteel, and the man who engages in two or three men were really skillful and qualified to meet the demand. But while the manufacturer was unable to find the trained men that he wanted, the country was full of young men drifting aimlessly about, waiting for something to happen which would afford them money with which to buy bread.

We complain of business depression, but when we look about us the wonder is that it is not greater, there are such crowds of men to be supported who add no value to produce of field, mill or mine, and yet have to be fed and clothed, how ever poorly from the results of those who do labor. The enforced idleness of to-day is partially due to the incapacity of those out of employment to engage in the higher departments of mechanical labor. There are in this country thousands of men who will be forced to be idle until light, genteel and simple avocations are furnished for one class, and until cities set to building parks on such a scale as will afford employment for that large class of men whose capacity for labor tends only to the use of a pick and shovel.

There are several causes which have united to produce the change referred to, but two are more prominent than the others. One of these is the notion which prevails (yet no one will confess that he or she is so silly to entertain it) that mechanical pursuits are not entirely respectable, or if respectable, they are not genteel, and the man who engages in manual labor, although as well-to-do, as intelligent and as useful in his calling, as is the lawyer or the merchant, is not in all respects his equal in society. All will admit that this notion is ridiculous and un-American; nevertheless, it exists and has its influence. Boys may not be told by their parents that manual labor is not respectable, but they get such impressions, and there are parents so foolish that they seem to prefer that their children shall go out into the world helpless rather than independent with a trade.

Another potent cause of the overthrow of the excellent custom of our fathers is found in the policy which trades unions have pursued toward the apprenticeship system. For years trades were shut up in the larger places to a large part of those who would learn them, by the rules of trades unions. This led to the "picking up of trades," and finally resulted in the importation of large numbers of foreign artisans, both of which has tended to lower the standard of the general intelligence in mechanical pursuits and the average skill of workmen. Foreign mechanics have brought with them the European prejudice against capital, which has had a tendency to widely separate employer and employe, and this fact has had its influence to keep American boys from mill and workshop.

It is scarcely necessary to say that there never was a time when intelligence and skill in mechanical pursuits were ever more needed or would bring surer rewards than at the present time. The United States is entering into competition with the nations skilled in the higher manufacturers for the markets of the world. If we propose to stand a fair chance our manufacturers will have to avail themselves of the best brain and the highest skill which the country can produce. Of the first we have an abundance and we can have the other if the young men of the country are led to believe that the highest honors are not for him who writes the best treatise on free trade, but for the man who can produce the most valuable product from the cheapest material at the lowest cost.

At the recent meeting of woolen manufacturers in this city several speakers referred to the necessity which they felt for skillful native workmen, qualified to take charge of departments. Would it not be wise for manufacturers to take measures to increase the facilities for practical and theoretical instructions in their respective departments?

Wire Worms

In answer to the inquiry of G. W. T., in your paper of April 15th, for a preventive for the depredations of the wire-worm, I recommend the following rotation of crops and management, which I have followed with success on a farm much overrun with them. Selecting my poorest meadow, if worth mowing, I mow it about the 20th of June, plow and sow to buckwheat as early in July as possible. I follow this with a crop of corn manured in the hill with manure thrown from the cow stables the preceding winter. The ground is furrowed one way with a light plow and with a marker the other. A smart man will cart manure 100 yds. and manure the hills as fast as two men can plant the corn, and do it well. A little earth should be placed on top of the manure, and then the plaster is put should be placed upon it, pressing it down before dropping the corn. My experience is that no wire-worm will trouble a hill of corn thus planted. Last year I burned manure for six weeks, and it rotted green, and the worms destroyed the corn. I found no manure as yet, or never so green as before. I follow the same plan now, and have no worms. I follow the same plan now, and have no worms. I follow the same plan now, and have no worms.

A young man named Wiley L. Morris was arrested, tried and convicted of the crime, but solemnly swore to his innocence to his last moments upon the scaffold.

FALLING SICKNESS

Permanently Cured—no humbug—by one month's usage of Dr. Goulard's Celebrated Infallible Fit Powders. To convince sufferers that these powders will cure them, we will send them by mail, post paid, a free Trial Box. As Dr. Goulard is the only physician that has ever made this disease a special study, and as to our knowledge thousands have been permanently cured by the use of these Powders, we will guarantee a permanent cure in every case or refund you all money expended. All sufferers should give these Powders an early trial, and be convinced of their curative powers.

Price, for large box, $4.00, or 4 boxes for $10.00 sent by mail to any part of United States or Canada on receipt of price, or by express.

My Neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am mute,
He lives across the way,
And plays upon the German flute
Some twenty hours a day.
On him I do not waste my labor,
Nor even try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am dumb,
She lives next door to me;
A single dame, with years o'ercome;
Her age is forty-three.
Ah! it were surely foolish labor,
For me to try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Heaven forfend!
He hath of gold galore,
And at usurious rates doth lend
Me small sums of his store.
And wherefore should I squander labor
Or waste my love on such a neighbor?

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Nay, not so;
This were too much to ask;
My heart with love is all aglow,
But finds a happier task.
Ah! not in vain my heart hath sought her;
You see? I love my neighbor's daughter.

THE MARCHIONESS OF MURDER.

Poisoning as a Fine Art.

Junius Henri Brown, in the June Appleton.

What may be called the social art of poisoning is generally connected with Italy. The history of that country is saturated with infernal drugs. Not to refer to the middle ages proper, the seventeenth century was remarkable for its multiplied poisonings. In Rome so many young widows avowed in the confessional to have gotten rid of their husbands by mysterious, deadly compounds, that the church, without revealing the names of the penitents, felt moved to arrest the wide-spreading crime. Its agents were not long in discovering that an old hag, Hieronyma Spars, was the chief cause of the mischief. She sold to all wives who came well recommended, and wished to be widowed, a transparent, odorless, tasteless liquor, which, administered according to directions, never failed to secure eternal divorce. All the women implicated were young, most of them handsome and attractive, and not a few were members of ancient and illustrious families of the city. The hag and some of her accomplices were hanged; others were whipped naked through the streets; and others, again, protected by their birth and position, heavily fined and banished from the country.

Even such rigorous measures did not prevent the murder, by slow poisons, of obnoxious husbands, who seemed to sicken and die from natural causes, and whose means of removal were not, therefore, suspected. A beautiful, Paternian by birth, Tophania by name (the notorious regina Tophania or Tofania, was called after her), long followed her fatid vocation in Naples, and was as ingenious as enthusiastic in her horrid trade. She died an active business; she sent her subtle preparations in small vials all over Italy, labeled "Manna of St. Nicholas of Bari." A miraculous secretion, believed to flow from the tomb of that saint, and to be a catholicon, had a great reputation among the faithful; and, disguised with the pious title, Tophania's lethal liquid passed through the land, revered by time she had been very prudent in regard to public appearances; but now she conducted her haison so openly that her father attempted to interrupt it by removing one of the causes.

Sainte-Croix, who had been in Italy, and learned something of its secret poisons, was very glad to increase his knowledge under an adept like Exili. Scoundrels discover and approve one another on instinct. The two become very friendly. The Italian taught the Frenchman how to make liquid poisons of the Sparsa sort, and also inheritance-powder (poudre de succession), ironically so called because it insured inheritances from people who had lived too long, and afterward so constantly administered throughout the kingdom.

Released from prison after a year, Sainte-Croix had grown expert in the nefarious pharmacy, and had decided to test it on the family of his mistress, from the double motive of revenge and avarice. He wanted to revenge himself on the father for causing his imprisonment, and to get rid of him and his immediate relatives in order that their property, which was large, might fall to Marguerite, who supported him and could refuse him nothing. She had been represented as sweet and guileless until he had corrupted her mind and heart, seducing her into crime after crime by the passionate love she felt for him. No doubt he made her infinitely worse than she would have been (it is hard for a woman to be extremely bad without liberal help from some man); she would have stopped short of murder, probably, had she never known him. But pure or good she never was, according to her own confession. She was depraved from her earliest years, and grew in sin as she grew in beauty; being at fourteen a pattern of loveliness and vice, a charming creature to be admired and feared. Hypocrisy was an inspiration with her, and Nature had aided her to deceive by giving her a countenance and mien that were capable of imposing on almost anybody. Gayot de Pitaval, in his compilation of "Causes Celebres," and Madame de Sevinge, in her correspondence, speaking of her innocent looks and winning manners; and the latter says that it was impossible to believe her guilty, judging by her face.

Andin and Marguerite were well matched; they were admirably adapted to a partnership in crime. He could be as bland and as gracious as she, and his ways were so gentle and captivating that he was generally thought to be one of the kindest and most amiable of men. Equipped with beauty, grace, intelligence, and wit, no wonder this extraordinary pair murdered for years with perfect security, and without the least suspicion.

During her lover's confinement she had affected the greatest benevolence and the deepest devotion. She distributed alms, visited the hospitals, took care of the sick, and performed so many offices of goodness and charity that many regarded her as a living saint. Her father and his family became entirely reconciled to her, so that it was very easy for her

John Chinaman.

A CALIFORNIAN'S VIEW OF THE SUBJECT
CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN.—Sir: The Sun of May 29th is a communication discussing the Chinese question. The Chinese problem is a new one, and strange as it is new. We of California do not mean to consider it from the standpoint of our own local interests. We do not mean to consider it through our prejudices. We claim to be intelligent upon the question, and we claim to know more about it than you of the East can know Public opinion—and by this I mean disinterested, intelligent public opinion—holds but one view, and that is that the Chinese invasion is an evil to be feared, and that it ought to be restrained by legislation. It is admitted that the presence of the Chinese among us has been of great temporary convenience, and has contributed largely to the development of our material interests. The building of railroads has been hastened, to lands have been reclaimed, some manufacturing establishments have been promoted, and families have been convenience by their employment as domestic servants.

But when we look to the future moral and political welfare of our State we fear the invasion of Asiatics. China has 400,000,000 of people; we have in the United States 40,000,000. The cost of passage from Hong Kong to San Francisco is $15; the cost from Chicago is $4. The wages of labor in the Quantico Province, from whence most of our immigrants come, average fifteen cents a day; the Chinese earn here $1 per day. It is a mistake to suppose that their employment is confined to menial occupations; they engage in our skilled industries. They have shown no disposition to acquire a knowledge of our institutions; they do not assimilate with our people in any respect. They cannot become citizens. We have 125,000 adult male Chinese in our State, 30,000 adult male Chinese in San Francisco, and we have 4,000 Chinese females, who are called prostitutes.

It is an error to say that the Chinese pay an aggregate of $500,000 taxes. The pay upon an assessed value of $500,000. In other words, the pay less than $15,000 taxes, exclusive of their poll tax and licenses.

New York is four times the size of San Francisco. "Love thou thy neighbor!" Heaven forbid!
He hath of gold galore.
And at usurious rates doth lend
Me small sums of his store.
And wherefore should I squander labor
Or waste my love on such a neighbor?

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Nay, not so;
This were too much to ask;
My heart with love is all aglow,
But finds a happier task.
Ah! not in vain my heart hath sought her;
You see? I love my neighbor's daughter.

THE MARCHIONESS OF MURDER.

Poisoning as a Fine Art.

Junius Henri Brown, in the June Appleton.

What may be called the social art of poisoning is generally connected with Italy. The history of that country is saturated with infernal drugs. Not to refer to the middle ages proper, the seventeenth century was remarkable for its multiplied poisonings. In Rome so many young widows avowed in the confessional to have gotten rid of their husbands by mysterious, deadly compounds, that the church, without revealing the names of the penitents, felt moved to arrest the wide-spreading crime. Its agents were not long in discovering that an old hag, Hieronyma Spara, was the chief cause of the mischief. She sold to all wives who came well recommended, and wished to be widowed, a transparent, odorless, tasteless liquor, which, administered according to directions, never failed to secure eternal divorce. All the women implicated were young, most of them handsome and attractive, and not a few were members of ancient and illustrious families of the city. The hag and some of her accomplices were hanged; others were whipped naked through the streets; and others, again, protected by their birth and position, heavily fined and banished from the country.

Even such rigorous measures did not prevent the murder, by slow poisons, of obnoxious husbands, who seemed to sicken and die from natural causes, and whose means of removal were not, therefore, suspected. A beldam, Palermite by birth, Tophania by name (the notorious egua Tophania or Tofana, was called after her), long followed her fatal vocation in Naples, and was as ingenious as enthusiastic in her horrid trade. She did an active business; she sent her subtle preparations in small vials all over Italy, labeled "Manna of St. Nicholas of Bari." A miraculous secretion, believed to flow from the tomb of that saint, and to be a cataplasm, had a great reputation among the faithful; and, disguised with the pious title, Tophania's lethal liquid passed through the land, revered by the superstitious, to be swallowed without distrust. What it was, long remained unknown; but it was so much employed for felonious purposes that it was subsequently analyzed. Hahnemann speaks of it as an arsenical neutral salt, which causes gradual loss of appetite, periodic faintness, stomachic pains, and decay of pulmonary tissues. Niccolo Garelli says it was arsenic dissolved in water, and infused with several herbs. A few drops in coffee, soup or wine, served the end; being hastened or retarded by the quantity given.

Tophania prospered to ripe old age. She had been suspected for years before she was brought to justice. The authorities could not get hold of her; for she was constantly changing her name, residence, and parent, and put forth such pretensions of piety that the church shielded her from the minions of the law. When hot pressed, she found sanctuary in convents, where she remained for months at a time. The ecclesiastic class protected her to the last; but the agents and soldiers of the Viceroy of Naples tracked her into a nunnery, and defying the supposed sanctity, arrested her, and put her to torture, when she confessed all her terrible crimes, along with the names of her employers. She seemed not to have been wholly mercenary. She had so much sympathy with friendly. The Italian taught the Frenchman how to make liquid poisons of the Spara sort, and also inheritance-powder (poudre de succession), ironically so called because it insured inheritances from people who had lived too long, and afterward so constantly administered throughout the kingdom.

Released from prison after a year, Sainte-Croix had grown expert in the nefarious pharmacy, and had decided to test it on the family of his mistress, from the double motive of revenge and avarice. He wanted to revenge himself on the father for causing his imprisonment, and to get rid of him and his immediate relatives in order that their property, which was large, might fall to Marguerite, who supported him and could refuse him nothing. She had been represented as sweet and guileless until he had corrupted her mind and heart, seducing her into crime after crime by the passionate love she felt for him. No doubt he made her infinitely worse than she would have been (it is hard for a woman to be extremely bad without liberal help from some man); she would have stopped short of murder, probably, had she never known him. But pure or good she never was, according to her own confession. She was depraved from her earliest years, and grew in sin as she grew in beauty; being at fourteen a pattern of loveliness and vice, a charming creature to be admired and feared. Hypocrisy was an inspiration with her, and Nature had aided her to deceive by giving her a countenance and mein that were capable of imposing on almost anybody. Gayot de Pitaval, in his compilation of "Causes Celebres," and Madame de Sevinge, in her correspondence, speaking of her innocent looks and winning manners; and the latter says that it was impossible to believe her guilty, judging by her face.

Gaudin and Marguerite were well matched; they were admirably adapted to a partnership in crime. He could be as bland and as gracious as she, and his ways were so gentle and captivating that he was generally thought to be one of the kindest and most amiable of men. Equipped with beauty, grace, intelligence, and wit, no wonder this extraordinary pair murdered for years with perfect security, and without the least suspicion.

During her lover's confinement she had affected the greatest benevolence and the deepest devotion. She distributed alms, visited the hospitals, took care of the sick, and performed so many offices of goodness and charity that many regarded her as a living saint. Her father and his family became entirely reconciled to her, so that it was very easy for her to execute the infernal schemes connected by Sainte-Croix. He profited by his freedom to impart to her whatever he had learned, and she proved to be a very apt pupil. He declared that, after six weeks' tuition, she could manage poisons equal to Exili or himself. She made no objection to his proposal to kill her kinsmen. Falling in with all his views, they set earnestly to work to devise the best method of carrying out the project. He prepared the powders, as he had the greater experience, and she undertook the delicate task of trying their efficacy, which, as the art was new in France, must be determined by actual experiment. She went to the hospitals of Paris with her subtle powders, but not before she had observed their effect on dogs, cats, and rabbits, and found that they accomplished what had been expected of them. The poisons were all slow poisons, some of them proving fatal in five or six weeks, and others in seven or eight months, so that they required the most careful handling. Particular attention needed to be paid to the dose and its repetitions, by which the time of death was regulated. Under the hideous pretence of benevolence, she handed delicacies to the patients, who thanked her with tears in their eyes, and went gradually to the grave. Many persons whom she had not designed to harm were killed by receiving from other patients part of our own local interests. We do not mean to consider it through our prejudices. We claim to be intelligent upon the question, and we claim to know more about it than you of the East can know Public opinion—and by this I mean disinterested, intelligent public opinion—holds but one view, and that is that the Chinese invasion is an evil to be feared, and that it ought to be restrained by legislation. It is admitted that the presence of the Chinese among us has been of great temporary convenience, and has contributed largely to the development of our material interests. The building of railroads has been hastened, tul lands have been reclaimed, some manufacturing establishments have been promoted, and families have been convenience by their employment as domestic servants.

But when we look to the future moral and political welfare of our State we fear the invasion of Asiatics. China has 400,000,000 of people, we have in the United States 40,000,000. The cost of passage from Hong Kong to San Francisco is $15; the cost from Chicago is $4. The wages of labor in the Quantun Province, from whence most of our immigrants come, average fifteen cents a day; the Chinese earn here $1 per day. It is a mistake to suppose that their employment is confined to menial occupations; they engage in our skilled industries. They have shown no disposition to acquire a knowledge of our institution, they do not assimilate with our people in any respect. They cannot become citizens. We have 125,000 adult male Chinese in our State, 30,000 adult male Chinese in San Francisco, and we have 4,000 Chinese females, who are called prostitutes.

It is an error to say that the Chinese pay an aggregate of $500,000 taxes. They pay upon an assessed value of $500,000. In other words, they pay less than $15,000 taxes, exclusive of their poll tax and licenses.

New York is four times the size of San Francisco. Now, if you will imagine 120,000 male adult Chinese, with their gamblers, opium eaters, and criminals with 10,000 prostitutes plying their vocation, and all located in the very heart of your city, living in dirt, filth and squalor speaking a different language dressing in different costume, underworking you laborers, not citizens, and with no ambition to become citizens, paying only $60,000 taxes for the support of your city and State Government, crowding your jails and penitentiaries, capable of bearing arms in defence of the country, alien in everything, sending their wages out of the country, importing the clothes they wear and the food they eat, employing no Americans as merchants, agents or middlemen, making no improvements and having no single point of sympathy with the people among whom they live you can form some idea of our condition.

If, in addition to this condition of things, $20,000 immigrants of the same class were landing each month at Castle Garden, would not the question be considered a grave one? Would not the laborers of New York be disturbed? Would not all be alarmed, in view of their native born becoming voters? Would you not deem it wise to restrict by some careful legislation this Pagan invasion?

This question seems to me to be a national one, and well worth the consideration of statesmen and leading journalists.

confessed all her terrible crimes, along with the names of her employers. She seemingly to have been wholly mercenary. She had so much sympathy with unhappy wives—she had probably been married herself more than once—that she thought them out, when they were too poor to purchase, and presented them
with her blessing and the means of mariage deliverance. But it is the fate of the victims to suffer. After her confession, and while the priests were still declaring
her to be a saint, a number of wicked soldiers secretly strangled her. And to this day, so far as known, the good To-phania has not been canonized.

France, in the latter half of the seventeenth century, gained an infamy for indiscriminate poisoning which even medieval Italy had not exceeded. It became a habit of the nation; to such a degree, indeed, that Madame de Sevigne writes in one of her letters that she is afraid Frenchman and poisoner may come to have the same meaning. But the French claim that the diabolical art was introduced by Italians. The crime had been rife for years, but had been done
so adroitly that the first knowledge of it was conveyed, as in Italy, through the confessional. There, also, wives avowed to the priests that they had put their lieges to endless sleep with cunning drugs, purchased of Italians. Two of whom, Gasirri and Exili, were arrested for compounding and selling the poisons, and thrown into the Bastille. The former died in confinement; but the latter,
making the acquaintance of another prisoner, Gaudin de Sainte-Croix, initiated
him into the mystery of refined murder,
and so laid the foundation of one of the strangest, most dramatic, and startling histories of the reign of Louis XIV.

Sainte-Croix was a young army officer,
an illegitimate though unacknowledged
son of a distinguished nobleman, a handsome and clever fellow, unburdened with principle of any kind. He had been consigned to the Bastille through the influence of Dreux d'Aubray, a civil lieutenant of Paris, with whose daughter, the Marchioness de Brinvilliers, he had been carrying on an intrigue. Having for an associate the marquis, as loose and profligate as himself, he had been introduced to the wife, young, beautiful and accomplished, and immediately proceeded to fall in love with her, in which fall she actively assisted him. The wife was an extraordinary character. She was engaging as she was false, as outwardly amiable as she was inwardly corrupt. She had fascinated the nobleman, a colonel of cavalry from Normandy, who had gone to the capital to spend to the best advantage his thirty thousand livres of income;
and he had married her in an intoxication of the senses. Rakish by constitution and custom, he soon went in pursuit of new pleasures, leaving her to follow her own. Having made Sainte Croix acquainted with her, he showed no uneasiness at an intimacy which could hardly have missed his notice. The fair and frail Marguerite became wearier of her husband than of her of her; and, after several years, during which she had passed more and more under the domination of her lover, she obtained a legal separation from the marquis on account of vices that he took no pains to conceal. Up to this experiment. She went to the hospitals of Paris with her subtle powders, but not before

she had observed their effect on dogs,
cats, and rabbits, and found that they accomplished what had been expected of them. The poisons were all slow poisons, some of them proving fatal in five or six weeks, and others in seven or eight months, so that they required the most careful handling. Particular attention needed to be paid to the dose and its repetitions, by which the time of death was regulated. Under the hideous pretence of benevolence, she handed delicacies to the patients, who thanked her with tears in their eyes, and went gradually to the grave. Many persons whom she had not designed to harm were killed by receiving from other patients part of the food she had bestowed, and some who were thought to have resisted the poison perished miserably after two or three years. Voltare—without any authority, however—denies her experiments at the hospitals; but Madame de Sevigne narrates them in detail, and she was quite as likely as he to know the truth. Besides, there is corroboration from other credible sources.

A Southern Reminiscence.

Old plantation days are passed away,
perhaps forever. My principles now lead me to abhor slavery and rejoice at its abolition. Yet sometimes, in the mists of heat and toil of the struggle for existence, the thought involuntarily steals over me that we have seen better days. I think of the wild rides after the fox and the deer; of the lolling, the book,
the delicious nap, on the balcony, in the summer-house, or at the rustic seat on the lawn; of the long sittings at meals,
and after-dinner cigar; of the polished
groups in easy but vivacious conversation
in the parlor; of the chivalric devotion to beautiful women; of the pleasant evening drives; of the visits to the plantation,
with its long, broad expanse of waving
green, dotted here and there with groups
of industrious slaves; of the long rows
of negro cabins with little pickaninnies playing about them; of the old well wish its beam and pole for drawing and of the women with pails of water on their heads;
of the wild old field airs ringing out from the cabins at night; of the "Christmas gift, Massa," breaking your slumber on the holiday morn; of the gay devices for fooling the dignified old darkeys on the first of April; of the faithful old nurse who brought you through infancy, under whose humble roof you delighted to partake of an occasional meal; of the flattering, foot-scrapping, clownish, knowing rascal to whom you tossed a silver piece
when he brought up your boots; of the little darkeys who scrambled for the rind
after you had eaten your water-melon on the piazza in the afternoon—and, "As fond recollection presents them to view."
I feel the intrusive swelling of the tear of regret. And so it is with every Southerner;
tears rise in his heart and gather to his eyes as he thinks of the days that are no more. The Southerners of old used to be perhaps the happiest of men. There was nothing to disturb them, nothing to do. Happiness was not only their being's end and aim but its enjoyment their one occupation. Now the cares of life, the struggle for a living, weigh them down.
It often strikes me, as I think of the intense enjoyment of the olden time, that perhaps just as the strongest force in physics is evolved from the greatest consumption of material, so it is ordained in human affairs, the most exquisite happiness shall be founded on the intensest misery of others.—Atlantic Monthly.

OUR SAILOR PRINCE.

The United Service Gazette says:—
"At a moment when the eyes of the nation are more particularly turned to the navy, it cannot but be both assuring and gratifying to find so important a unit of that force as one of its finest sea-going iron-clad ships referred to in such terms of eulogy as those used by the Prince of Wales at the jubilee festival of the Licensed Victuallers Asylum, on Monday, the 7th May. In proposing the toast of the Services, His Royal Highness said:—"I have lately returned from a short trip in the Mediterranean, where I had the pleasure of spending ten days in one of the finest men-of-war in Her Majesty's service, and though the captain of that vessel is my own brother, I feel I may say that there few vessels which are in a better state of order and discipline. And I think if all the rest of the fleet are in the same state we have no cause to complain of our naval service." As regards the first portion of His Royal Highness's remarks, the whole service and those who know anything about the service will agree with him. Our Sailor Prince is an officer who has few professional superiors.
He has not chosen the navy as a mere pastime. From the time he commenced his training on board the 6-gun brig
Rolla, under command of Lieutenant—
now Captain—Chas. G. Nelson, the Duke of Edinburgh, through all its junior grades he has loved his profession, and successfully worked to gain the high repute attached to the titles, 'a first-rate

Struggle Between a Boa and a Bull Dog.

A correspondent in Sunghu Ujong, writing under date May 16, gives the following account of a remarkable encounter between a boa 15 feet long and a buli dog. The boa had been confined in a cage for some days, but having been disposed of to a Chinese doctor for its gall, to be used as medicine, he was hauled out of the cage on the 16th to be taken away. "The boa was immediately attacked by the dog, who had a passage of arms with him. For some time the boa was quiet, and only now and then made a snap. The dog got hold at last,
and seized the snake by the head, but the tables were soon turned. In an instant the boa caught the dog by the upper lip and held firmly on, the dog backing vainly and trying to get away. In less than half a minute the whole of the snake's body had infolded the dog's in so close an embrace that the head only could be seen. Before choppers could be procured, blood was gushing from the dog's mouth, and I heard his bones give one crack, and it was only by chopping
the boa to pieces that we saved the dog.
I found on examination that the boa
has very strong sharp, recurved teeth,
not only in the jaws, but also in the palate bones, which accounts for the dog being unable to extricate himself in the first instance, for teeth being like the 'Vacuna bechee' of South Africa, the more he struggled backward the tighter
he was held by the boa. I may add for the information of the friends of the dog that he is none the worse for his squeeze."

In the village of Grimsby, a little six-year old, aided by some other boys, got through a window into a room where a corpse was lying, and stole the screws
from the coffin lid.

A CALIFORNIAN'S VIEW OF THE SUBJECT OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN.—Sir: In The Sun of May 29th is a communication discussing the Chinese question. The Chinese problem is a new one, and strange as it is new. We of California do not mean to consider it from the standpoint of our own local interests. We do not mean to consider it through our prejudices. We claim to be intelligent upon the question, and we claim to know more about it than you of the East can know Public opinion— and by this I mean disinterested, intelligent public opinion—holds but one view, and that is that the Chinese invasion is an evil to be feared, and that it ought to be restrained by legislation. In a Turkish Harem.

A female contributor to Scribner's for June, writing of a state ball in Constantinople, gives this account of the occupants of a Turkish harem:—We were introduced to Mme. Aali, a very intelligent amiable little lady, who salamed us in Turkish style by putting her hand to her forehead and her heart, said a variety of pretty welcomes by means of the inter- pretress, by taking us by the hand intro- duced us successively to all the high and mighty female magnates of the land. We were exceedingly disappointed in the toilets of these ladies; with the exception of their underserts of Broussa gauze they were nearly all dressed in European fabrics of various kinds, full trowsers, slippers, and over-dress more like the soutane of a Romish priest than any other garment,—the train of which they slip under a belt when they walk, in the same manner that he does. Instead of the long, braided tresses which he had expected to see falling to their feet, their hair was cut short, and surmounted by an embroidered gauze handkerchief put on like a turban; but to compensate for the lack of Oriental splendor in the rest of their dress, their jewels far outstripped our imagination. This being the only manner in which Turkish females can invest money and often all this is left to them at the death or sudden disgrace of their husbands, they seize every opportunity to enrich their store, and the display is certainly dazzling.

Mme. Aali's turban was surmounted by a wreath of enormous pansies composed of diamonds, which completely encircled her head; and in the midst of the pansies rose, mounted on an oscillating wire, a bird the size of a humming bird, which was one mass of diamonds with flashing ruby eyes. Ear-rings and necklace matched this diadem in magnificence. Most of the other ladies were literally blazing with jewels. With the exception of the wealthiest and the most nobly born among them, an Egyptian princess married to one of the pashas, who whether from having lost a near relative or from weariness and contempt of the gewgaws, had bedizened her numerous attendant slaves with jewels worth a king's ransom, and herself remained unadorned. One young married lady, about 15, was dressed in a French muslin of a brilliant corn color, and next under it she had donned a crinoline, which articles were then worn very large, so that the effect of the steels, clearly defined beneath the scant folds of the transparent muslin, was ludicrous in the extreme; but the others looked at her with admiration as she paraded her French organdie and hoop skirt before them, her girlish face surmounted by a regal coronet of magnificent gems. If the Moslems were harmonious in their dress before the time of Mahmoud, as they must have been from the accounts of travellers, its character has disappeared from the effects of its European innovations, for the scarlet fez looks out of place with the straight colored coat and modern trousers of the Conversations.

How's your father?—Dead, the whisper. He died of the stone, speaking! Oh, how nicely!—Annie murmured. Satisfyingly the whisper taking.

Conversation stopped a moment!—Hopeless! Had ceased another!—Annie!—What a scolding! And the question, "How's your mother?"

"Mother! Oh, she's doing nicely!"—Predicting that was all forbearance. When, in low, conspiring accents, Came the climax, "How's your parents?"

A Clever Dog.

The following letter appears in the Spectator, London:—

"Sir,—Some time ago I sent you my recollections of a dog who knew a half penny from a penny, and who could count up as far as two. I have been able to obtain authentic information of a dog whose mental powers were still more advanced, and who, in his day, besides being celebrated for his abilities, was of substantial benefit to a charitable institution in his town. The dog I refer to was a little white fox terrier, Prin by name, who lived at the Lion Hotel, at Kidderminster, for three or four years; but now, alas! he is dead, and nothing remains of him but his head in a glass case.

"I had heard of this dog some months ago, but on Saturday last, having to make a visit to Kidderminster, I went to see him. The facts I give about him are based on the statements of Mr. Lloyd, his master, and they are fully substantiated by the evidence of many others. I have before me a statement of the proceeds of 'Dog Prin's' box, Lion Hotel, subscriptions to the 'Lionary.' The contributions began in September, 1874, and ended on April 25th, 1876, and during that period the sum of £13 14s 6d was contributed through Prin's instrumentality.

"He began by displaying a fancy for playing with coins, not unusual amongst terriers, and he advanced to a discovery that he could exchange the coins for biscuits. He learnt that for a halfpenny he could get two biscuits, and for a penny, three; and having become able to distinguish between the two coins, it was found impossible to cheat him. If he had contributed a penny, he would not leave the bar till he had his third biscuit; and if there was nobody to attend to his wants, he kept the coin in his mouth till he could be served. Indeed, it was this persistence which ultimately caused poor Prin's death for there is every reason to fear that he fell a victim to copper-poisoning.

"By a little training he was taught to place the coins, after he had got the biscuits, upon the top of a small box fixed on the wall, and they were dropped for him through a slit. He never objected to part with them in this way, and having received the quid pro quo, he gave complete evidence of his appreciation of the honourable understanding which is so absolutely necessary for all commercial transactions.

"An authenticated case like this is of extreme value, for just as the elementary stages of any science or discovery are the most difficult and the slowest in accomplishment, so are the primary stages of all mental processes. To find the preliminary steps of the evolution of mathematics and commerce in a dog is therefore a very important observation, and everything bearing on these early phases of intellect should be carefully recorded.

It is an error to say that the Chinese pay an aggregate of $500,000 taxes. They pay upon an assessed value of $500,000. In other words, the pay less than $15,000 taxes, exclusive of their poll tax and licenses.

New York is four times the size of San Francisco. Now, if you will imagine 120,000 male adult Chinese, with their gamblers, opium eaters, and criminals, with 10,000 prostitutes plying their vocation, and all located in the very heart of your city, living in dirt, filth, and squalor, speaking a different language dressing in different costume, underworking your laborers, not citizens, and with no ambition to become citizens, paying only $60,000 taxes for the support of your city and State Government, crowding your jails and penitentiaries, capable of bearing arms in defence of the country, alien in everything, sending their wages out of the country, importing the clothes they wear and the food they eat, employing no Americans as merchants, agents or middlemen, making no improvements, and having no single point of sympathy with the people among whom they live, you can form some idea of our condition.

If, in addition to this condition of things, $20,000 immigrants of the same class were landing each month at Castle Garden, would not the question be considered a grave one? Would not the laborers of New York be disturbed? Would not all be alarmed, in view of their native born becoming voters? Would you not deem it wise to restrict by some careful legislation this Pagan invasion?

This question seems to me to be a national one, and well worth the consideration of statesmen and leading journalists.

OUR SAILOR PRINCE.

The United Service Gazette says:—"At a moment when the eyes of the nation are more particularly turned to the navy, it cannot but be both assuring and gratifying to find so important a unit of that force as one of its finest sea-going iron-clad ships referred to in such terms of eulogy as those used by the Prince of Wales at the jubilee festival of the Licensed Victuallers Asylum, on Monday, the 7th May. In proposing the toast of the Services, His Royal Highness said:—"I have lately returned from a short trip in the Mediterranean, where I had the pleasure of spending ten days in one of the finest men-of-war in Her Majesty's service, and though the captain of that vessel is my own brother, I feel I may say that there few vessels which are in a better state of order and discipline. And I think if all the rest of the fleet are in the same state we have no cause to complain of our naval service." As regards the first portion of His Royal Highness's remarks, the whole service and those who know anything about the service will agree with him. Struggle Between a Boa and a Bull Dog.

A correspondent in Sunghu Ujong, writing under date May 16, gives the following account of a remarkable encounter between a boa 15 feet long and a bull dog. The boa had been confined in a cage for some days, but having been disposed of to a Chinese doctor for its gall, to be used as medicine, he was hauled out of the cage on the 16th to be

A Romantic and Thrilling Recognition.

About ten years ago two brothers left their home in Illinois and went to California. The elder was a man of the most steady habits, and had received a good business education, but the younger was inclined to be dissipated, and, indeed had figured so many scrapes home that his departure was not regretted in his native village. The two brothers lived for a short time in San Francisco, where they looked for situations. The younger brother, however, fell into bad company, and they separated by mutual consent. The elder brother obtained a situation in a whole sale store as porter and by his diligence and steadiness so worked himself into the confidence of his employers that he rose from the position of porter to that of partner in the firm. He lately purchased a house in Bush street, married a lady with considerable fortune of her own, and on last Christmas Eve, he saw three beautiful children around him enjoying the delights of a Christmas tree. The family retired at midnight, but the gentleman had hardly closed his eyes when he was awaked by a noise down stairs, and moving stealthily to the parlor with a revolver in his hand, he saw a man endeavouring to open the buffet where he kept the silver. Levelling his revolver at the thief's head, he exclaimed "stop, or you are dead man." The jimmy dropped from the hands of the burglar, who, falling on his knees, cried out. "As God is my judge, Robert, I did not know that you lived here!"

The gentleman discovered the his horror that the burglar whom he was about to shoot was the younger brother whom he had not met for nearly ten years. That night the burglar slept peacefully under the roof of his forgiving brother, who assured a friend, with tears in his eyes, that he was about to give him employment in his own store, and that he had never spent a happier Christmas.—San Francisco Call.

The Tobacco Scourge.

The Rev. J. F. Norris, for many years a missionary in Burmah, writing to the secretary of the American Bible Union of New York of tobacco as a hindrance to the usefulness of clergymen, as a deadening to the moral sensibilities, and of its use among the heathen, says: "May God hasten the day when all shall see (as I know he sees) that for us to use tobacco is no less a sin than for us to use rum. In heathen lands, so far as I have seen, the use of tobacco among the natives is universal. Both sexes and all ages are addicted to its use. Little children in Burmah often learn to suck the cigar before they are done nursing, and you can scarcely find a heathen woman walking the street without a cigar stuck either in her mouth or her ear (the latter being drawn down and perforated for the purpose). Science in War.

The present Russo-Turkish war can be less interesting than those that have so recently preceded it, and we may especially point out two directions in which fresh examples of scientific warfare will probably manifest themselves—in connection namely, with the cavalry pioneer and the Whitehead torpedo. Both of these will probably be seen in warfare for the first time, and before many days are past we may hear of their doings in action. The cavalry pioneer must not be compounded with the Prussian uhlan, who played so conspicuous a part in the last war. The ubiquitous uhlan, terrible as he was, did not work the injury which some of the Cossacks will have it in their power to inflict if accoutred as pioneers. These are selected from the smartest and most daring troopers, lightly armed and well mounted. In a belt round their waists they carry a few pounds of gun-cotton or dynamite, and with this mighty destructive explosive they may work incalculable harm. A small charge of gun-cotton placed simply upon a rail and fired with a fuse suffices to blow several feet of the iron to a distance of many yards, thus rendering the railway unserviceable on the instant. A trooper may dismount place a charge at the base of a telegraph pole, fire it, and be in his saddle again within 60 seconds. Wires may thus be cut, and communication stopped in the heart of an enemy's country by fearless riders, who have but to draw rein for an instant to effect the mischief, while lines of railway in the neighborhood are entirely at their mercy, even light bridges and well built stockades may be thrown down by the violent detonation of compressed gun-cotton, and forest roads considerably obstructed by trees thrown across, which are never so rapidly felled as when a small charge of this explosive is fired at their roots. The influence of the Whitehead torpedo, of which we have heard so much of late, will likewise be felt for the first time during the present war. An implement so ingenious in its character that, as Lord Charles Beresford the other day happily remarked, it can do almost anything but talk, is in the possession of both belligerents, and will doubtless be heard of before long on the Danube and in the Black Sea. These torpedoes are manufactured at Flume on the Mediterranean, and, like Krupp-guns, are to be purchased by any one who chooses to pay for them.—Scientific American.

Fashion Novelties.

There is no such thing now-a-days as a fashionable dress for fetes, races, &c., made of one material, and the most eccentric contrasts are in vogue, as, for example, moss-green and pale pink. Dresses are not made in the richest materials, because such eccentric contrasts are not likely to last more than a season. Every device is brought into play to render the figure as slim-looking as possible; under-garments are made narrow, clinging and closely fitting, and the newest bodices have as many as thirteen seams, so as to render them as shapely as possible. Whalebones are to be replaced by steel springs, somewhat resembling those that were used for crinolines in days of yore. They are more pliable and less clumsy than whalebone, and define the outline of the figure better;

She went to the hospitals of Paris subtle powders, but not before observed their effect on dogs, rabbits, and found that they achieved what had been expected of the poisons were all slow poisons, them proving fatal in five or six and others in seven or eight so that they required the most handling. Particular attention to be paid to the dose and its manner, by which the time of death varied. Under the hideous pretence of benevolence, she handed delicate patients, who thanked her for their eyes, and went gradually to the grave. Many persons whom not designed to harm were killed, receiving from other patients part of what she had bestowed, and some were thought to have resisted the poisons miserably after two or three. Voltaire—without any authority—denies her experiments at the hospitals; but Madame de Sevigné narrates them in detail, and she is as likely as he to know the truth. Besides, there is corroborative evidence from credible sources.

Plantation days are passed away, forever. My principles now to abhor slavery and rejoice at its abolition. The Southerners of old used to be the happiest of men. There was nothing to disturb them, nothing to depress them, not only their being's aim but its enjoyment their one aim. Now the cares of life, the struggle for a living, weigh them down. It strikes me, as I think of the enjoyment of the olden time, that it is just as the strongest force in the world is evolved from the greatest combination of material, so it is ordained in the affairs, the most exquisite happiness all be founded on the intensest of others.—Atlantic Monthly.

The dog got hold at last, and seized the snake by the head, but the tables were soon turned. In an instant the boa caught the dog by the upper lip and held firmly on, the dog backing vainly and trying to get away. In less than half a minute the whole of the snake's body had infolded the dog's in so close an embrace that the head only could be seen. Before choppers could be procured, blood was gushing from the dog's mouth, and I heard his bones give one crack, and it was only by chopping the boa to pieces that we saved the dog. I found on examination that the boa has very strong sharp, recurved teeth, not only in the jaws, but also in the palate bones, which accounts for the dog being unable to extricate himself in the first instance, for teeth being like the 'vacuna bechea' of South Africa, the more he struggled backward the tighter he was held by the boa. I may add for the information of the friends of the dog that he is none the worse for his squeeze."

General Grant in England.

LONDON, June 24.—President Grant was presented last night at a banquet given by the corporation of Trinity House. The Prince of Wales, who presided, referring to General Grant in his speech said, "On the present occasion it is a matter of peculiar gratification to us, as Englishmen, to receive as our guest General Grant." Earl Carnarvon speaking of General Grant's hearty welcome, said it was not merely because they believe he performed the part of a distinguished General, nor because he twice filled the highest office the citizens of his great country can fill, but because they look upon him as representing that good will and affection which ought to subsist between England and the United States. General Grant replied in appropriate terms, thanking the Prince of Wales for his kindly remarks, and saying he never before felt more impressed than on this occasion.

Fred Douglass On Races.

Fred Douglass paid a recent visit, for the first time since he left here forty-one years ago, to the scenes of his youth to visit his former master Captain Thomas Auld, Talbot Co. Md. He was received by Judge Bruff, Captain Auld's son-in-law. The meeting was very affecting. In the afternoon, Douglass addressed a large audience of white and coloured people. He said to the coloured people that they were in contact with the most indomitable and most enlightened race in the world and he would be false to his own race if he did not tell them what an immense distance they were behind the white people. He did not believe the coloured people were fundamentally inferior to the whites but they are nevertheless practically inferior. We must not talk about equality until we can do what the white people can do.

Tilley, but he would do Sir John the credit of saying that Mr. Tilly was not sworn in when he (Sir John) ceased to be Premier. Then there was Hon. C. Dunning, who was made a Judge, and Hon. Macdonald, of Picton, who was made a Judge. In short, during Sir John's administration, covering a period of three years, he had only six out of the thirteen original members beside him when he went out of office, while Mr. Mackenzie, in four years, had eight who stood shoulder to shoulder with him as members of his Cabinet (Applause.) He asked those who had heard the respective statements to recollect who made them and then decide which was most accurate! Sir John, he observed, was also not only calculating upon being restored to power, but had commenced to count on his majorities. In Quebec he expected, out of 65 members, 55; the Maritime Provinces were to be swept by the Conservatives, and British Columbia and Manitoba; Sir John, having bought them, feels certain of them—he thinks they are bound to support him. But Sir John does not count much on Ontario. He does not expect Ontario to go strong for them no more than he expected to be elected for Kingston by a clamour. (Applause.) And he (Sir John) had as much chance of being elected by acclamation, if, indeed, he be elected at all, as the Chairman had of being made Czar of all the Russians. (Applause.) But there was significance in the boast—significance to which he called attention, Straws showed which way the wind blew. Sir John Macdonald boasted nothing of result of elections in his own native Province; but if returned to power he expects an overwhelming majority from Quebec. He wronged it, but it was well that they should see on what he relied for a return to power. He remembered when Sir John Macdonald relied upon the compact French majority. Sir John was King in name, but there was a power behind the throne—there was a Vice-Roy over him in the persons of the late Sir Geo. Cartier. Over and over again, Sir John, in defiance of his own judgment, and for the sake of a few months of office stooped his neck and placed himself under Sir George Cartier's heel. Sir Geo. Cartier he credited with having a sincere desire for the promotion of the interests of the country. If Sir John were returned to power and had, as he expects, 55 out of 65 seats in Quebec, he would be, not a slave, but a slave of slaves. Those who took any interest in the past history of the country should look back with him twenty years, and ask themselves when Sir John had a majority in his native Province. He recollected one occasion when he had a majority, but only when acting in collusion with a gentleman of known political professions in the past. He referred to those two matters because they were the only two points of importance in Sir John's speech; and he had shown how accurate they were, and how worthy of credence. If Sir John returned to power under such circumstances they would find him, if not worse, at least no better. As his hon. friend the Premier would be leaving at an early hour he would not detain them then, but he promised to deal with the special questions coming under the department in the Government over which he presided at another time. On the present occasion he only desired to say that the address of Mr. Mackenzie would clear him of the effects of statements levelled against him. There was no fear of his (Mr. M.'s) memory failing, no fear he would not be able to give chapter and verse for every statement he made before them, and it should be so since it would be read from one end of the Dominion to the other. For four years he

Baby Farming in Philadelphia.

ASTOUNDING DISCOVERIES BY A DETECTIVE OFFICER.

The Philadelphia Society for Protecting Children from Cruelty has made some astounding discoveries in relation to baby farming establishments, whose existence in the Quaker City has not been heretofore suspected. An extensive scheme of this kind was discovered some years ago in New York and its participants punished. The business flourishes in many cities in Europe. Mr. Crews, Secretary of the Society, having had his attention attracted to the subject by an ordinary complaint, found the matter broadening until he finally traced baby-farmers to a notorious court in the heart of the city. Here Mr. Crews found two houses,—one occupied by an old English woman and the other by an old Irish woman, with seventeen babies in their possession, none of them their own. Under ordinary circumstances the matter would have been one which the Society would have moved in, as the children were suffering inseparably from rum-drinking care-takers, but the agent carefully worked the case up to a more important point. He hunted the neighborhood by day and by night sometimes staying until nearly daylight. He found that the observations of the neighboring residents corresponded with his own, and that the wails of the poor infants all night long in those two houses were no strange sounds to the neighbors, who have for some time been talking about the subject and resolving to direct the attention of the authorities to it. He finally watched until one of the women went out, and then he inquired at the house of the other women for her by name. The women asked him what he wanted with her friend, and he stated that he had got into trouble, and desired to make arrangements for the board of an infant. She took the bait at once, and assuring him that she in the same business, asked for a job. The officer ingeniously improved the terms he had thus got on with the woman to worm out of her a great deal of information that will hereafter prove valuable. When he had obtained pretty much all the knowledge he thought would be useful as important, he remarked to her carelessly, "Whose child was that, that was buried out of your house at midnight a short time ago?" The woman eyed him peculiarly a moment, and said, "You are an officer?" to which he rejoined, "Yes, and as you have already convicted yourself, you might as well make a clean breast of the whole business," but she would not have any further conversation with him. The officer had, however, learned enough to satisfy him that these and other establishments of a like kind are part of a far-reaching system of crime in which the principals are a number of doctors, who live principally by criminal malpractice. The Society now has in its possession the names of the "fathers and mothers" of the children found farmed out, together with the names of several doctors, some of whom are quite prominent, and it is expected that their connection with this base and murderous business can be established beyond doubt. There is also at least nine undertakers whose complicity appears to be established, including the one who buried a child at night as above stated.

NAPANEE, JULY, 6th 1877.

MR. CARTWRIGHT IN KINGSTON.

The following report of our Finance Minister's speech, at the Reform gathering in Kingston on the 27th ult., we clip from the Whig :—

Mr. Cartwright said that as a citizen of Kingston he could not allow this occasion to pass without expressing his deep sense of the debt which he owed to the Reform Association of Kingston for this reception. Although for forty years a resident of Kingston, he did not believe, until this occasion, he had seen any political gathering at all equal to the magnificent one to which they had invited the Premiers of the Dominion and Province of Ontario. (Applause) It had been his good fortune to address them on former occasions, and he expected to have the pleasure of doing so again. This was the first opportunity they had of hearing Messrs. Mackenzie and Mowat since these gentlemen had assumed the reins of power. Therefore he should not trespass on their time but speak briefly in reply to some of the remarks which fell from gentleman of the Opposition on a recent occasion in the City Hall. He said that in dealing with political matters such as those now before the country much depended upon the veracity, or if that were too strong, upon the accuracy, of the respective speakers. He proposed to call attention in the first place to one or two rather remarkable instances of the extreme accuracy of the distinguished gentlemen who are now stalking up and down the country, like roaring lions, seeking whom they may devour. The Hon. Sir John Macdonald, in his observations, confined himself to brining certain charges against the Administration of which his hon. friend the Premier was the leader, and to some little bragadoocio. Sir John Macdonald was exercised in mind because Mr. Mackenzie had seen fit to promote certain of his colleagues to the responsible and important offices of Lieut. Governors of the various Provinces of the Dominion. He then quoted from the Mail the statement of Sir John, that during his Premiership not a single one of his colleagues had taken office after being honored by a seat in the Cabinet. He would not impute Sir John's veracity, but he would call this statement the result of a frightful loss of memory. (Applause.) And if it be true, as stated by learned physicians, that a total loss of memory is preceded by a total loss of mental power, he no longer wondered that Sir John had declared his last will and testament, appointing Dr. Tupper his heir-at-law, and announcing him as the coming distinguished political disciple. If Sir John could not remember appointing any of his colleagues to office he (Mr. C.) would take back all least no better. As his hon. friend the Premier would be leaving at an early hour he would not detain them then, but he promised to deal with the special questions coming under the department in the Government over which he presided at another time. On the present occasion he only desired to say that the address of Mr. Mackenzie would clear him of the effects of statements levelled against him. There was no fear of his (Mr. M.'s) memory failing, no fear he would not be able to give chapter and verse for every statement he made before them, and it should be so since it would be read from one end of the Dominion to the other. For four years he had been in daily conversation with the honourable gentleman, and he would just say that no Minister had ever inflicted upon himself so much personal toil, and was now undergoing so much labour as Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. He had commenced life as a hard worker, and he was still the hardest working man in the whole Dominion. (Applause.)

War Correspondent

A Bucharest letter says that there are at present 320 newspaper correspondents in Roumania. But says the London correspondent of the Birmingham Gazette, they have hard times. The London journals, for instance, have gone to a vast expense in order to get information about it. One London morning paper has sent no fewer than six specials, yet 'scarcely' one of is able to send home anything. To begin with, there is very little to send. What little there is must for the most part be kept back in order not to betray the movements of the armies to which the correspondents are attached. Then, again Armenia, where most of the fighting has taken place hitherto, is so far off that 99 out of every 100 Englishmen know nothing about it and taken no interest in it. Even the places on the Danube are comparatively little known, and unless one happens to have the events of the Russian campaign clearly in one's memory, it is not easy to follow the different movements. Very different was it in the Franco-German war, when the fighting took place on territory that most of us know as well as the country between London and Plymouth, territory that is in fact, the holiday ground of Europe. Once more the war has hung fire; so much so that the ordinary newspaper reapers have not patience over it, and will not read the columns of correspondence, and scarcely even the telegrams, which are published in such profusion.

Capital Punishment.

In the House of Commons, Sir J. Eardley Wilmot having moved a resolution declaring that while it is not possible at the present time to remove the penalty of death altogether from the statute book, it is desirable to consider whether the laws under which offenders are liable to capital punishment should not undergo revision. Mr. Pease proposed an amendment in favor of the total abolition of the death penalty. Upon a division the amendment was negative by 155 against 59. A second division was taken upon the original motion which like the amendment, was negative, the numbers being 139 against 61. During the debate a letter was read from a leading Government Commissioner in Holland, stating that since the year 1860 no person convicted of murder had been executed, but that murder had not increased. Since the formal abolition the number of convictions for murder have been in 1871, five; in 1872, five; in 1873, one; in 1874, two. The statistics for 1875 and 1876 are not yet published. By the law of 17th September, 1870, imprisonment for life was substituted in the Netherlands for capital punishment.

There is also at least nine undertakers whose complicity appears to be established, including the one who buried a child at night as above stated.

The Destruction of Dogs.

The method of destroying unclaimed dogs by means of chloroform has been abandoned, being considered too costly. A plan equally satisfactory as to results, and involving a very trifling expense, was brought into use on Thursday night for the first time. The modus operandi may be thus briefly described:—The victims are placed in a large wooden box, opening into which is a metal pipe communicating with a stove outside. In this stove is a quantity of ignited charcoal, the fumes of which find their only outlet through the pipe referred to into the box. Directly the gas flows in in sufficient quantities the ventilators at the heads of the box are closed, and the animals, overcome by the fumes, fall almost immediately into a state of stupor, which very shortly ends in death. It is evident that the death must be a perfectly painless one, and the absence of any howling or other symptoms of distress is an additional proof of this. The box being covered in on all sides, there is no opportunity, as on former occasions, for enabling crowds of onlookers to gratify a morbid curiosity by watching the dying struggles of the poor animals. About thirty were destroyed in this manner on Thursday night, all in the space of fifteen minutes. Too much credit cannot be given to the City Commissioner for his readiness to consider and act upon all such humane suggestions.—Toronto Globe.

Important to Dairymen.

A case of some interest to dairymen was tried at Glenco last week. The manager of the Mayfair cheese factory laid complaint against William Cowan for watering the milk which he supplied to the factory. At the trial it was shown that the milk supplied by him at several times registered from 85° to 90° on the lactometer, while the average should have been about 100°. The directors, with the consent of Cowan, had Cowan's cows milked, and on testing the product found it to register about 100°. Mr. Cowan then signed a document agreeing to deduct ten per cent. from what he was to receive for his milk. He attributed the excess of water to carelessness in milking; by the rinsings of the milk pails having been put with the milk. Cowan was fined $5, and $7.50 cost.

He was shortly followed by another gentleman, who had been ill-requited by Sir John, and took the first opportunity to call the head of the government a traitor, and his colleagues traitors. He referred to Hon. Mr. Macdougall, who was appointed Lt. Governor of Manitoba, but who was only permitted to gaze upon the promised land, and who was obliged to return to the somewhat ignominious position of being an insignificant bone in Sir John Macdonald's tail to the end of his days. (Applause.) Following this came the appointment of Mr. Archibald, also a colleague of Sir John's, who was first appointed Chief Justice of Manitoba, and then made Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia. Then Hon. Mr. Howe, for his political service, was appointed Lieut. Governor of his native Province. Then came Mr. Morris, who was first elected a Judge of Manitoba, and then made Lieut. Irish Emigration Summary.

Waxing jubilant over the fact that only 6,279 persons left Ireland for the Colonies during the quarter ending March last, the Belfast News remarks:—"This is a great change from former periods, when the people were swept away wholesale to open up and enrich other lands, while in the great majority of cases they were themselves the victims of poverty and hardship. Irishmen have had more than enough of the emigration craze; they have found out that the fields elsewhere are not so green as they were represented, not nearly so green as at home; and that the tempting inducements held out of leaping into fortunes were delusive, the fortunes being made not by them but by very small men in the Colonies, who would not care what became of them after they had used them up for their own selfish purposes. It is gratifying to find that Irishmen have begun to see through the emigration scheme, and have resolved on doing the best they can at home. They see that the agents, who have been so anxious to send others to the Colonies, do not themselves rush away at the first opportunity. The agents evidently prefer Ireland to the best of the Colonies, and let the people do the same."

A case of some interest to dairymen was tried at Glenco last week. The manager of the Mayfair cheese factory had complaint against William Cowan for watering the milk which he supplied to the factory. At the trial it was shown that the milk supplied by him at several times registered from 85° to 90° on the lactometer, while the average should have been about 100°. The directors, with the consent of Cowan, had Cowan's cows milked, and on testing the product found it to register about 100°. Mr. Cowan then signed a document agreeing to deduct ten per cent. from what he was to receive for his milk. He attributed the excess of water to carelessness in milking; by the rinsings of the milk pails having been put with the milk. Cowan was fined $5, and $7.50 cost.

The "Sea Serpent" Again.

OFFICIAL THIS TIME—ON HUMBLES.

An official report has been forwarded to the Admiralty from the officers of her Majesty's royal yacht Osborne, containing an account of a sea monster seen on the 2nd inst., off Sicily. The time was five o'clock in the afternoon. The sea was exceptionally smooth, and the officers were provided with good telescopes. The monster had a smooth skin, devoid of scales, a bullet shaped head, and a face like an alligator. It was of immense length, and along the back was a ridge of fins, about fifteen feet in length and six feet apart. It moved slowly, and was distinctly seen by all the ship's officers.

Only a Printer.

"He is only a Printer," was the sneering remark of a leader in the circle of aristocracy—one of the codfish quality. Well, who was the Earl of Stanhope? He was only a printer. What is Prince Frederick William of Prussia? Only a printer. Who was William Caxton, one of the fathers of literature? He was only a printer. What were Horace Greeley, George D. Prentice, Charles Dickens, M. Thiers, Douglas Jerrold, Bayard Taylor, G. P. Morris, J. Gales, C. Richardson, N. P. Willis, and Senators Dix, Cameron and Niles? They, too, were only printers. What was Benjamin Franklin? A printer. Every one can not be a printer. Brains are necessary.

Baby Farming in Philadelphia.

ASTOUNDING DISCOVERIES BY A DETECTIVE OFFICER.

The Philadelphia Society for Protecting Children from Cruelty has made some astounding discoveries in relation to baby farming establishments, whose existence in the Quaker City has not been heretofore suspected. An extensive scheme of this kind was discovered some years ago in New York and its participants punished. The business flourishes in many cities in Europe. Mr. Crews, Secretary of the Society, having had his attention attracted to the subject by an ordinary complaint, found the matter broadening until he finally traced baby-farmers to a notorious court in the heart of the city. Here Mr. Crews found two houses,—one occupied by an old English woman and the other by an old Irish woman, with seventeen babies in their possession, none of them their own. Under ordinary circumstances the matter would have been one which the Society would have moved in, as the children were suffering inseparably from rum-drinking care-takers, but the agent carefully worked the case up to a more important point. He hunted the neighborhood by day and by night sometimes staying until nearly daylight. He found that the observations of the neighboring residents corresponded with his own, and that the wails of the poor infants all night long in those two houses were no strange sounds to the neighbors, who have for some time been talking about the subject and resolving to direct the attention of the authorities to it. He finally watched until one of the women went out, and then he inquired at the house of the other women for her by name. The women asked him what he wanted with her friend, and he stated that he had got into trouble, and desired to make arrangements for the board of an infant. She took the bait at once, and assuring him that she in the same business, asked for a job. The officer ingeniously improved the terms he had thus got on with the woman to worm out of her a great deal of information that will hereafter prove valuable. When he had obtained pretty much all the knowledge he thought would be useful as important, he remarked to her carelessly, "Whose child was that, that was buried out of your house at midnight a short time ago?" The woman eyed him peculiarly a moment, and said, "You are an officer?" to which he rejoined, "Yes, and as you have already convicted yourself, you might as well make a clean breast of the whole business," but she would not have any further conversation with him. The officer had, however, learned enough to satisfy him that these and other establishments of a like kind are part of a far-reaching system of crime in which the principals are a number of doctors, who live principally by criminal malpractice. The Society now has in its possession the names of the "fathers and mothers" of the children found farmed out, together with the names of several doctors, some of whom are quite prominent, and it is expected that their connection with this base and murderous business can be established beyond doubt. There is also at least nine undertakers whose complicity appears to be established, including the one who buried a child at night as above stated.

The Destruction of Dogs.

The method of destroying unclaimed dogs by means of chloroform has been abandoned, being considered too costly. A plan equally satisfactory as to results, and involving a very trifling expense, was brought into use on Thursday night for the first time. The modus operandi

A Victory of Valour.

The following account of a descent by Major Walsh, of the North-west Mounted Police, on a camp of defiant Indians, who threatened to resist his authority, is given in the Fort Benton (Montana) Record:—

Mr. Joseph Lessard, who returned from Cypress Mountains in the early part of last week, reports that on the 28rd May about 40 miles from Fort Walsh, a lively row took place between a camp of Assiniboines, numbering about 250 lodges, and a party of Sauteux, numbering about forty lodges. It appears that the two camps were together, but the Sauteux attempted to violate one of the Assiniboine laws by leaving about the time a "soldier dance" was to come off. The Assiniboines made the attack by killing the dogs, cutting the tents and striking the chief of the Sauteux; but the latter, knowing that his camp was too weak to resist, restrained his people, and sought redress by reporting the case to Major Walsh, upon learning which, the Assiniboine chief sent word to the Fort that he defied the Mayor and dared him to come to the camp. Major Walsh, with only fifteen privates and two officers, at once set out, and coming suddenly upon the camp, took nineteen prisoners without firing a shot. Conveying the captives to the top of a hill some distance off, he left them under guard and returned to the camp accompanied by his two officers only. Calling the chiefs together, he informed them that the prisoners would be taken to Fort Walsh, tried, and punished if found guilty. The chiefs were very insistent, and demanded the release of their friends, but they attempted no violence, and finally consented to let the plucky policeman have his own way. The prisoners were taken to Fort Walsh, tried and punished according to the laws of the North-west Territory. Major Walsh is evidently the right man in the right place, and deserves great credit for his energy and pluck displayed in subduing these belligerent reds.

A Grasshopper Harvester.

There has been shipped from this city to points in Minnesota, over the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, over two thousand barrels of coal tar and twenty tons of sheet iron, consigned mostly to the Governor of that State.

The article has been sold by Chicago merchants at cost price, while the railroad company has taxed the shippers a merely nominal figure for hauling the freight, as they are the parties who, next to the farmers, expect to be most largely benefited in the end. The coal tar will be used for the extermination of the young grasshoppers, and the sheet iron is required for the construction of a machine for the effective utilization of the tar. Thousands of these machines will be built in Minnesota before the end of next week. The machine is simple in its construction. A strip of sheet iron, twelve or fifteen feet long, is bent up on one edge sufficiently to admit of its passing over lumps of earth. Other strips, from four to six inches wide are riveted on the other edge and at each end, forming a kind of scoop. (This is a "scoop" on the other grasshoppers.) A wire is attached to each front corner of the scoop, by which it can be drawn over the ground. A chain or rope is fastened so that will drag upon the ground about eighteen inches in advance of the machine. This will scare up the grasshoppers. The inside of the scoop is thickly plastered with coal-tar, and the machine is dragged across the field against the wind. Millions of "hoppers will stick to the tar. When the scoop gets full the driver can either scrape off the insects in a heap and burn them

The Destruction of Dogs.

The method of destroying unclaimed dogs by means of chloroform has been abandoned, being considered too costly. A plan equally satisfactory as to results, and involving a very trifling expense, was brought into use on Thursday night for the first time. The modus operandi may be thus briefly described:—The victims are placed in a large wooden box, opening into which is a metal pipe communicating with a stove outside. In this stove is a quantity of ignited charcoal, the fumes of which find their only outlet through the pipe referred to into the box. Directly the gas flows in in sufficient quantities the ventilators at the heads of the box are closed, and the animals, overcome by the fumes, fall almost immediately into a state of stupor, which very shortly ends in death. It is evident that the death must be a perfectly painless one, and the absence of any howling or other symptoms of distress is an additional proof of this. The box being covered in on all sides, there is no opportunity, as on former occasions, for enabling crowds of onlookers to gratify a morbid curiosity by watching the dying struggles of the poor animals. About thirty were destroyed in this manner on Thursday night, all in the space of fifteen minutes. Too much credit cannot be given to the City Commissioner for his readiness to consider and act upon all such humane suggestions.—Toronto Globe.

Important to Dairymen.

A case of some interest to dairymen was tried at Glencoe last week. The manager of the Mayfair cheese factory laid complaint against William Cowan for watering the milk which he supplied to the factory. At the trial it was shown that the milk supplied by him at several times registered from 85° to 90° on the lactometer, while the average should have been about 100°. The directors, with the consent of Cowan, had Cowan's cows milked, and on testing the product found it to register about 100°. Mr. Cowan then signed a document agreeing to deduct ten per cent. from what he was to receive for his milk. He attributed the excess of water to carelessness in milking; by the rinsings of the milk pails having been put with the milk. Cowan be used for the extermination of the young grasshoppers, and the sheet iron is required for the construction of a machine for the effective utilization of the tar. Thousands of these machines will be built in Minnesota before the end of next week. The machine is simple in its construction. A strip of sheet iron, twelve or fifteen feet long, is bent up on one edge sufficiently to admit of its passing over lumps of earth. Other strips, from four to six inches wide are riveted on the other edge and at each end, forming a kind of scoop. (This is a "scoop" on the other grasshoppers.) The inside of the scoop is thickly plastered with coal-tar, and the machine is dragged across the field against the wind. Millions of 'hoppers will stick to the tar. When the scoop gets full the driver can either scrape off the insects in a heap and burn them or blaze them against the bottom of the machine. This exterminator is said to be working admirably.—Chicago Factory and Farm.

"Survival of the Fittest"

The ingenious doctrine propounded by Mr. Darwin, the tireless investigator of nature and her laws, is as applicable in determining the fate of medicines as in that of the animal species. Every year new remedies are brought before the public, and are soon completely discarded as their sale rapidly decreases. Only those medicines which are best suited to the people's wants survive the first test. If they "are tried, and found wanting" in the merits which they are claimed to possess, no amount of advertising will make them popular. Of all the remedies ever introduced to the public, none are so popular as Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Their sale has steadily increased each year, and wholesale druggists assert that the present demand for them is greater than ever before. If you would patronize medicines scientifically prepared use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Golden Medical Discovery is alternative, or blood-cleansing, and an unequalled cough remedy; Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic; Favorite Prescription, a remedy for debilitated females; Extract of Smartweed, a magical remedy for pain, bowel complaints, and an unequalled liniment for both human and horseflesh; while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. They are sold by druggists.

Canadian Cattle in England

Last Thursday, says the London Live Stock Journal, "Messrs John Swan & Sons sold at Glasgow, for Messrs. Bell, 139 live Canadian bullocks imported per steamer Corinthian last week. They were mostly in good condition, and prices ranged from £24 to £31 each. At Liverpool last week there arrived from Canada 150 head of oxen and 10 valuable horses, besides 6,365 quarters beef and 210 sheep. On Tuesday of the present week the Wilson Liner, Othello, Captain Bristow, arrived at Hull from New York with a very large general cargo, among which were 146 head of cattle and 350 sheep. The whole of the consignment was landed in excellent condition. The beasts were for the most part animals of great frame, and they were in such a condition that they may at once be brought into the market. If this experiment proves a success, each of the vessels of the Wilson Line will be specially fitted for the trade."

people's wants to surmount the first test. If they "are tried, and found wanting" in the merits which they are claimed to possess, no amount of advertising will make them popular. Of all the remedies ever introduced to the public, none are so popular as Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Their sale has steadily increased each year, and wholesale druggists assert that the present demand for them is greater than ever before. If you would patronize medicines scientifically prepared use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Golden Medical Discovery is alternative, or blood-cleansing, and an unequalled cough remedy; Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic; Favorite Prescription, a remedy for debilitated females; Extract of Smartweed, a magical remedy for pain, bowel complaints, and an unequalled liniment for both human and horseflesh; while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. They are sold by druggists.

Canadian Cattle in England.

Last Thursday, says the London Live Stock Journal, "Messrs John Swan & Sons sold at Glasgow, for Messrs. Bell, 139 live Canadian bullocks imported per steamer Corinthian last week. They were mostly in good condition, and prices ranged from £24 to £31 each. At Liverpool last week there arrived from Canada 150 head of oxen and 10 valuable horses, besides 6,365 quarters beef and 210 sheep. On Tuesday of the present week the Wilson Liner, Othello, Captain Bristow, arrived at hull from New York with a very large general cargo, among which were 146 head of cattle and 350 sheep. The whole of the consignment was landed in excellent condition. The beasts were for the most part animals of great frame, and they were in such a condition that they may at once be brought into the market. If this experiment proves a success, each of the vessels of the Wilson Line will be specially fitted for the trade."

Co-operative Bazaar.

A London correspondent writes:—"A novel co-operative bazaar is to be held at the Albert Hall. The idea belongs to a Miss Hyde. She has formed a kind of joint-stock company of ladies, of which anybody may become a member upon the payment of a certain subscription, and they are to have the privilege of sending all manner of articles of dress and needlework to be sold at the bazaar. The proceeds of each article are to be paid to the member who sent it, and thus those of the more industrious portion of amateur seamstresses will stand a fair chance of making pocket money. Several persons of position and reputed wealth have as I understand, joined in the enterprise, which is hardly to be wondered at when it is provided that the names of the participants in the work and profits are not to be disclosed."

Insurance Protection.

St. JOHN, N. B. June 27.—The insurance agents publish the following this morning:—

"We, the undersigned, hereby agree bind ourselves and the companies we represent not to accept or grant any insurance upon any wooden, veneered, or brick cases buildings hereafter erected, or any stone or brick buildings hereafter roofed with shingles, or the contents thereof within the limits of the City of St. John, N. B., signed by the agents of the Royal, Western, Canada Fire and Marine, Commercial Marine, Lancashire, Queen, Liverpool, London, and Globe, Northern, Imperial, Etina, Hartford, British American, and Phoenix of Brooklyn, Provincial, Stadacona, Citizens, Royal Canadian and Guardian Insurance Companies.

in on all sides, there is no opportunity, as on former occasions, for enabling crowds of onlookers to gratify a morbid curiosity by watching the dying struggles of the poor animals. About thirty were destroyed in this manner on Thursday night, all in the space of fifteen minutes. Too much credit cannot be given to the City Commissioner for his readiness to consider and act upon all such humane suggestions.—Toronto Globe.

Important to Dairymen.

A case of some interest to dairymen was tried at Glenco last week. The manager of the Mayfair cheese factory laid complaint against William Cowan for watering the milk which he supplied to the factory. At the trial it was shown that the milk supplied by him at several times registered from 85° to 90° on the lactometer, while the average should have been about 100°. The directors, with the consent of Cowan, had Cowan's cows milked, and on testing the product found it to register about 100°. Mr. Cowan then signed a document agreeing to deduct ten per cent. from what he was to receive for his milk. He attributed the excess of water to carelessness in milking; by the rinsings of the milk pails having been put with the milk. Cowan was fined $5, and $7.50 cost.

The "Sea Serpent" Again.

OFFICIAL THIS TIME—ON HUMBOLDT.

An official report has been forwarded to the Admiralty from the officers of her Majesty's royal yacht Osborne, containing an account of a sea monster seen on the 2nd inst., off Sicily. The time was five o'clock in the afternoon. The sea was exceptionally smooth, and the officers were provided with good telescopes. The monster had a smooth skin, devoid of scales, a bullet shaped head, and a face like an alligator. It was of immense length, and along the back was a ridge of fins, about fifteen feet in length and six feet apart. It moved slowly, and was distinctly seen by all the ship's officers.

Only a Printer.

"He is only a Printer," was the sneering remark of a leader in the circle of aristocracy—one of the codfish quality. Well, who was the Earl of Stanhope? He was only a printer. What is Prince Frederick William of Prussia? Only a printer. Who was William Caxton, one of the fathers of literature? He was only a printer. What were Horace Greeley, George D. Prentice, Charles Dickens, M. Thiers, Douglass Jerrold, Bayard Taylor, G. P. Morris, J. Gates, C. Richardson, N. P. Willis, and Senators Dix, Cameron and Niles? They, too, were only printers. What was Benjamin Franklin? A printer. Every one can not be a printer. Brains are necessary.

The Late Storm.

The thunder and lightning of Saturday night was terrific and blinding in its effects. Immense damage was done by wind, rain and hail to crops, and buildings in Canada and the States. A Catholic church in New Hampshire was entirely consumed by lightning.

Antiquities.

Mr. Erastus Pringle (living three miles from Napanee, in the 3rd Con. of Richmond) recently found a gun and pistol, (both loaded) a dirk knife, and a piece of a man's boot, also $50 in gold, all covered with leaves, in a swamp on the rear of his farm. On lifting the gun, the stock—like Rip Van Winkle's old shooting stick—separated from the barrel, and Dredging the Harbour.

It is understood that Mr. Daly has the contract for re-dredging the river, and that $4,000 has been set apart for the purpose.

Temperance Lecture—Marysville.

That popular speaker and reformer,
the Rev. Father O'Rielly, will deliver a temperance lecture in St. Mary's Hall, Marysville on Monday the 9th inst.
Friends of the cause and others, should by no means fail to hear him. Tickets 25 cts.

The Crops.

The Daily Globe of 27th, and 28th, ult., contains full reports from over 500 places in the Dominion. It fills over a page of fine type and is alphabetically arranged for convenience of reference. From a rough summary we would say the forthcoming harvest will be excellent.

Victory for the Silver Leaf B. B. Club.

The Leafs defeated the Dufferins of Bath on the latter's ground on Dominion Day by a score of 17 to 13. Both clubs showed weakness in fielding. The Dufferins gave their opponents a supper at Wemp's Hotel accompanied by music,
in fact our boys were very hospitably entertained throughout.

Cheap Excursion.

An excursion, under the patronage, of the Y. M. C. A., of Kingston, passes through Napanee on Wednesday the 11th inst., at 7:45 a. m. Return tickets to Toronto $2.00, and from Toronto to Niagara Falls, $1.00. Excursionists can go to and return from the Falls, any day
during the limits of the tickets, which are good from the 11th to the 21st, inclusive. Hotel rates reduced at all stopping places along the route.

County Orange Celebration.

On Thursday next the 12th inst., the Orangemen, O. Y. Britons, and True Blues from Napanee will celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne at Tamworth. They will be accompanied by the Napanee Brass Band, and will start at 7 a. m., by the way of Selby.
Delegations from every lodge in the county are expected. Dinners are to be provided at all the Hotels, and extra accommodation for visitors.

Autumnal Circuit.

The autumn sittings of the Court of Oyer
and Terminer and General Gaol delivery,
and of Assize and Nisi Prius, will com-
at the following places and dates, the Hon. Mr. Justice Moss presiding:—

1. Napanee, Monday, October 1st.
2. Picton, Friday October 5th.
3. Belleville, Tuesday, October 9th.
4. Kingston, Wednesday, October 24th.
5. Brockville, Tuesday, November 9th.

This will be Judge Moss' first official visit to Napanee.

St. Patrick's Church Picnic.

The annual out-door demonstration under the auspices of the congregation of the Roman Catholic Church will be held on Tuesday next, 10th July, in the Crystal Palace Grounds.—The Rev. Father
Matthew of Camden, and the Rev. Father
Stafford of Lindsay will deliver addresses.
There will be facilities for dancing and out door sports and games. Refreshments will be served in the palace. A gold headed cane will be offered for competition between Sir Jno. A. Macdonald and the Hon. R. J. Cartwright. The gentleman receiving the highest number of votes will receive the cane. Admission to the ground 25cts. A concert will be held in the Music Hall in the evening.
Tickets 25 and 50 cts.

Boyle's Stove and Tin Ware Depot.

Dropping in on Friend Boyle, we were agreeably surprised to see him driving
such a brisk trade in such a dull time.
His staff of assistants—five—including himself, were all as busy as nailers, his facilities for manufacturing were never better, a large well-lighted workshop,
with a fine salesroom enables him to compete successfully with any house in town.
The tinware made on the premises is done under careful supervision and with the best material. His superior class of ploughs and plough-shears, are eagerly bought by farmers who are determined to have the best in the market. He wishes all newly-married ladies to consult economy and comfort at the outset,
and add to their conjugal bliss by securing an A. 1 cooking stove, with a complete assortment of tinware, thereby preventing that wide spread element of family discord—a half-cooked dinner.

Important Investigation.

Our esteemed fellow townsman, A. N.
Diamond has been sent by the "National Board of Trade," of the United States, to look over this County East and West and report on the state of the crops in general, and the Barley crops in particular. He was supplied with a powerful magnifying field glass, to penetrate to the very heart of the seed, and will be able to detect if the invisible clay land crops
will require new seed for another year.
It is expected his report will show a wonderful amount of research into this never failing theme of interest to our whole community, and will as well, enable him to calculate by personal experience, if close inspection and close association with the crop will produce intemperate habits. The association has indeed selected the man of all men for this business, as he is also the Classifier
this year of all the Canadian Barley and has been selected by the Canadian League
to advise with all combinations and concerns in the Barley trade, to liquidate their grain only after it is Malted. The Malsters in America desired to secure his services and offered to place his statue on the top of the great "Staten Island Malt House," if he would become a Malster. But you might as well try to move a mountain as to get him to desert
his many friends in this country for whom he always has, and will contrive to get the best figure.

The Late Store Robbery.

Having "spotted" the store of Mr. Spen-

Mr. R. W. Spence has withdrawn from the firm and returned to Montreal, to re-engage in the wholesale dry goods trade, in the firm in which he was formerly employed. Mr. Jno. Downey will continue the business, having engaged Mr. Albert Reid, formerly with Mr. J. W. Dunnett, Belleville, to superintend the dry goods department.

Cricket Match.

The return match between the Civilian and Artillery was played on Dominion Day. The bowling of Messrs. Chinnick and Hayes of the Civilians, and Mr. B. S. Abrams and the Rev. D. F. Borgart of the Artillery, was excellent. The largest scores were made by Messrs. F. S. Richardson and J. Webster, of the Artillery. Civilians, 2 innings, —63. Artillery, 9 wickets to go down, —64.

Antiquities.

Mr. Erastus Paingle (fixing three miles from Napanee, in the 3rd Con. of Richmond) recently found a gun and pistol, (both loaded) a dirk knife, and a piece of a man's boot, also $50 in gold, all covered with leaves, in a swamp on the rear of his farm. On lifting the gun, the stock—like Rip Van Winkle's old shooting stick—separated from the barrel, and it has probably lain in this position for the last twenty years.

The Model School—West Ward Tank.

At the meeting of the School Board on Tuesday night, the purchase of the Roblin Mansion was again discussed and laid over for one month. Dr. Rutten, T. S. Henry and S. McL. Detlor were appointed a committee to confer with the committee appointed by the Council relative to the location of the tank in West Ward.

Holidays.

The law now provides for two vacations during the year for Public schools; the summer vacations shall be from July 8th to August 17th, inclusive, and the winter vacation from December 24th to January 2nd, inclusive. In United High and Public Schools the vacations shall be the same as are prescribed for High Schools, viz.: Three vacations during the year, from Good Friday to Easter Monday, inclusive; from July 14th to August 31st; and from December 23rd to January 6th.

Business.

Professor Louis Napoleon Maximilian Green, at the Tichborne House corner on Wednesday evening, drew the largest crowd seen in town since the advent of the Dunkin Act. He gave a free exhibition of slight-of-hand, swallowing (?) about ten pounds of cotton batting without a pause, besides various other feats of legerdemain, which kept the spectators in a roar of laughter, for fully three hours. His main object being to sell a 'cure-all' which disappeared like butter under a July sun, realizing for the Professor the modest sum of $21. This accounts for the scarcity of small change during the past two days.

The Fire Brigade—New Uniform.

At a regular meeting of the Firemen on Tuesday night, the following resolution was passed:—"Moved by D. Henwood, sec. by Mr. Joy, and resolved, that the thanks of this Company are due, and are hereby tendered to the citizens of the town for their liberal contributions toward the fund for procuring belts, thereby enabling us to complete our uniform." The belts and uniforms were distributed on Tuesday. The pants are black, with red stripe. The coats blue, white binding

The "Stadacona" Ins. Co.

QUEBEC, June 29.—The Chronicle says:—"We understand that at their meeting yesterday the Directors of the Stadacona Insurance Company decided to call up twenty per cent. on the subscribed capital payable in four instalments of five per cent. each. They also deemed it advisable to notify their agents to take no more premiums for the present and request the policy-holders to insure elsewhere. The amount of their unearned premiums is to be returned hereafter."

Precautions on Railways.

There is a movement on foot, among superintendents of railroads in the States to begin the practice of requiring all passengers to enter the cars at the front ends, and to leave them at the rear ends. All the roads are striving to make quicker time and the loss at stations is a matter of importance. If the proposed practice could be adopted, there would be not only a saving of time, but an avoidance of crowding and liability to accident. It will be remembered that a lady recently came near being killed at Napanee Station, the crowd formed a jam on the car steps, and she fell between the brakes, and was rescued just as the train was starting.

Personals.

The Hon. R. J. Cartwright was in town on Tuesday, on his way home from the Reform gathering in Newmarket.

Mr. Francis Bartles, (formerly of Napanee, from St. Hyacinthe, played with the Artillery in the cricket match on Dominion Day.

Having 'spotted' the store of Mr. Spencer, they effected an entrance on the night in question, and made their way to Belleville on foot, where they secreted their booty in a sand pit before daylight. The Belleville police, seeing the adv. in the Globe were on the watch. The fellows were charged with thefts in Belleville on the 26th ult., and denied being in Napanee, Robertson escaped and Gilbert was arrested, he confessed and all the goods were recovered except a shirt he wore at the time. He was brought to Napanee by Chief Allen and Mr. Spencer. The evidence before Mr. James was taken on Monday. Mr. Spencer, the proprietor sworn—I missed the goods on the morning of the 27th ult., my attention being called to the loss by my clerk, Jos. McAllister, saw a broken glass in back door of cutting room. I first saw and identified the goods at the Police Station in Belleville. I saw the prisoner there under arrest. I had a conversation with him in the cars. He said they were my goods, that he and one Robinson had taken them from my shop about 2 a. m. on the 27th June. He enumerated the articles, also a shirt and a pair of kid gloves which are not here. It was his partner who took them. I identify the goods in court as mine. They consist of 16 peckies, 1 1/2 pair of braces, 2 tweed coats, 2 worsted coats, 5 tweed vests, and 1 silk velvet vest, 5 pair of tweed pants, and 6 white shirts. The prisoner said that he broke the pane of glass, that he then reached up and pulled down the bolt, and cut a notch in a broom handle and with it pulled up the lower bolt, and while he held it up, his companion pushed the door open. Jos. McAllister clerk sworn—I missed several articles of clothing and shirts at 6:30 a. m., on the 27th. I slept upstairs, Mr. Jno. Paisley first called my attention to the back door being open. I found a pane of glass broken through with one bolt was drawn. I tried and found I could draw the upper bolt through it, found a broom handle with a notch cut in it, Mr. Spencer was away. Think the bottom bolt was drawn by the notch stick. The goods in court are those I missed. The prisoner was committed for trial.

A Commendable Success.

Master E. J. Bristol, son of Dr. Bristol, of this place, has carried off one of the exhibitions at the Upper Canada College examinations at Toronto. This College offers eight exhibitions, four for the fifth, and four for the fourth form which include free tuition and from $40 to $80 in money, open to the province and students of the College. The examination for entrance to the 6th form is considered equal to matriculation into the University of Toronto. The whole of the exhibitions were taken by students of the College, except No. 8 to the 6th form, which fell to the lot of Master Bristol. This is very creditable to our townsmen, who, at the age of fifteen, could compete with older students, and pass such an examination successfully. He was formerly a student of our High School, and has been in active preparation only two months.

She Hit Him Hard.

The sudden appearance of the storm on Saturday night caused a general stampede of the numerous pedestrians thronging ‘Broadway.’ One rather weighty old gent—with a corporeity like a beer barrel,—in his eager flight to a place of shelter, while suddenly rounding a corner was met by a young lady coming with equal speed from the opposite direction. Having her head down, she ran it plump against the identical spot where the old fellow deposits his usual daily allowance of bread and butter. The collision was terrific. The fat party fell on the flat of his back, and his fair antagonist went sprawling over him, picking herself up she was off like a shot, while her victim sat helpless on the pavement unable to catch his wind, and exposed to the drenching rain. Finally, recovering his equilibrium, he gave vent to anathemas against the whole female sex in general, and this one in particular, to the infinite glee of the by-standers, who enjoyed the fun ‘highly.’

An address was delivered by Mr. Matheson, of Napanee, subject “The Claims of Free Masonry.” Mr. J. N. Lapin and others responded to the various toasts which were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. The evening's entertainment closed at 11.30 p. m.

Building Improvements.

At present, two brick houses only, are in course of erection in Napanee. Mr. Rose's East above Thomas st., and Mr. Wm. Rankin's near the residence of Jas. Briggs Esq., on the south side of the river. We lately made an inspection of the latter, and found the location so pleasant, and everything so well apportioned, that a few notes will not come amiss to those of our readers who purpose building, and who would consult economy, with stability and convenience. The house is 26ft square, with 18ft walls, and an addition for a summer kitchen or woodhouse, 18x20. The brickwork was plastered between the inner and outer courses, which is greatly conducive to warmth, and should always be adopted. The shingles are laid in mortar, making the roof to a certain extent fireproof. The cellar is full size, hard cement floor and 6 ft ceiling giving airiness and facility of ingress. On the ground floor—one dining two bedrooms and a kitchen, with cistern and pump, ceilings 9ft high. The second floor contains a parlour and four bedrooms with 8 ft ceilings, each room opening into a large well-lighted hall, a convenience often overlooked in the best of houses. The well contains excellent water and is conveniently located. There is an absence of all useless gingerbread-work, conspicuous in the miserable shells so frequently erected in our town. It will repay a visit from intending builders. The brickwork by Mr. Jos. Kirby, woodwork by Mr. Wm. V. Smith, and the plastering by Mr. Wm. Eurit, and a better wall for durability and finish cannot be found. Estimated cost $1,400.

Boyle's Stove and Tin Ware Depot.

Dropping in on Friend Boyle, we were greatly surprised to see him driving a brisk trade in such a dull time. His staff of assistants—five—including himself, were all as busy as nailers, his facilities for manufacturing were never better. A large well-lighted workshop, with a fine salesroom enables him to compete successfully with any house in town. The tinware made on the premises is one under careful supervision and with the best material. His superior class of ploughs and plough-shears, are eagerly sought by farmers who are determined to have the best in the market. He fishes all newly-married ladies to comfort and comfort at the outset, and adds to their conjugal bliss by securing an A 1 cooking stove, with a complete assortment of tinware, thereby preventing that wide spread element of family discord—a half-cooked dinner. Miller's old stand below the Briscoe house.

Important Investigation.

Our esteemed fellow townsman, A. N. Hammond has been sent by the "National Board of Trade," of the United States, to look over this County East and West and report on the state of the crops in general, and the Barley crops in particular. He was supplied with a powerful magnifying field glass, to penetrate to the very heart of the seed, and will be able to detect if the invisible clay land crops will require new seed for another year. His expected his report will show a wonderful amount of research into this ever failing theme of interest to our whole community, and will as well, enable him to calculate by personal experience, if close inspection and close association with the crop will produce intemperaments. The association has indeed lectured the man of all men for this business, as he is also the Classifier this year of all the Canadian Barley and is being selected by the Canadian League to advise with all combinations and concur in the Barley trade, to liquidate their aim only after it is Malting. The aldermen in America desired to secure his services and offered to place his statue on the top of the great "Staten Island at Home," if he would become an alderman. But you might as well try to move a mountain as to get him to desert many friends in this country for whom he always has, and will contrive to be the best figure.

Late Store Robbery.

One of the parties concerned in the robbery of Mr. Spencer's store has been arrested in Belleville. It has transpired that two parties named Robertson and Robertson came here from Belleville on a prospecting tour, on the 26th inst. having spotted the store of Mr. Spencer, they effected an entrance on the night in question, and made their way to the tiller, where they secured

DOG TAX.

Councillor James brought in by-law to appoint a person to collect poll and dog-tax for the current year, it was read the first and referred to committee of the whole. Reeve in the chair, reported the by-law with the name of Jeremiah Storms, inserted as collector. Mov. by Roe, sec. by Carscallen, that it be referred to next meeting of Council.—Carried.

TANK IN WEST WARD.

Mov. by Lane, sec. by Roe, that the Committee on Fire and Water, let by tender, or sell by auction, the job of building a suitable water tank near the Academy lot in the West Ward. The plastering of the tank not to be paid for until the tank has been tested and approved of by the Council. Tank to contain 4,800 cubic feet.—Mov. in amendment by James, sec. by Fralick, that Committee on Fire and Water be authorized to build tank in West Ward 12ft. by 20 and 12ft. deep, to be built of stone, lined with brick and properly plastered.—Original motion carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mov. by Lane sec. by Joy that the old orders in the Treasurer's hands in favor of the late Wm. Bird, be paid to Mrs. Bird.—Carried.

ACCOUNTS.

Grange & Bros, for R. R. tickets, was referred back to them, to attach the orders R. Easton, for R. R. ticket, ordered by Mayor—Deferred for explanation from the Mayor till next meeting. There is nothing strange around here to my knowledge that claims my immediate attention at present. Peace and tranquility reigns throughout this neighborhood, all seem to understand the true principles of politeness and benevolence, all enjoying the primary blessings of life, the hearts of the people rejoice over this effects of the beautiful rain on Saturday afternoon, and in the night. The smile of Providence is seen over the green fields. All these blessings greatly claim the sincere gratitude of our hearts. Very windy yesterday afternoon Sunday July 1st. To day calm but a little cloudy July 2nd.

Quite a number of persons, mostly the bloom of the coming age, visited this neighborhood on Tuesday the 26th ult., from Centerville and elsewhere for the picnic, Gohebydd was not present, but he infers from the evidence of sight and hearing, that they all enjoyed the entertainment.

Trial of Mowing Machines.

BOMANVILLE, June 28.—A grand field trial of mowing machines was held under the auspices of the Durham Co. Agricultural Society, near here to-day, on the farm of Mr. Frank. in a splendid field of clover, one of the best crops in this vicinity. Nine machines were entered for competition by the different manufacturers. Several hundred farmers were present. The Champion, made by the Joseph Hall Manufacturing Co. of Oshawa, was awarded the first and second prizes, and the Meadow Lark, made by the Messrs. Haggart, of Brampton, the third prize. The machines were all tested by a dynamometer. The draught of the Champion light mower was the lowest on record, namely, 125 pounds, beating its own record at the great Centennial trial near Philadelphia last year by seven pounds.

TURKISH VICTORY.

The Governor of Erzeroum telegraphs "the Russian army, consisting of 5,000 horse, 16 battalions of infantry, and 83 guns attacked our camp at Zewin, with the object of occupying Soghauli. The enemy opened fire from 19 guns in front of the entrenchments of our right wing. In the afternoon the Russian infantry and cavalry attacked our left wing, commanded by Chefket Pasha. The engagement lasted until evening, and resulted in the repulse of the Russians, who however, recommended the fight at night to no purpose. The Russians were routed and returned to their fortified camp. The Turks lost 400 killed and wounded; the Russians' loss was 3,000. The Russians are preparing for another attack."

RUSSIAN BOMBAST.

BUEAARST, June 28.—The Czar has issued a proclamation to the Bulgarians, saying that the Russian troops have entered Bulgaria to secure to the Bulgarians the sacred rights of their nationality. Russia's mission is to build, not destroy. She will not protect every Christian against violence, and will give equal protection to the Mussulmans, but will bring to justice the known participants in atrocities. Turkish rule will be replaced by regular organizations of native inhabitants under the direction of special authorities. Bulgarian legions will be formed to maintain order and security.

The fellows were charged with thefts in Belleville on the 26th ult., and denied being in Napanee, Robertson escaped and Gilbert was arrested, he confessed and all the goods were recovered except a shirt & were at the time. He was brought to Napanee by Chief Allen and Mr. Spencer. His evidence before Mr. James was taken on Monday. Mr. Spencer, the proprietor sworn—I missed the goods on the morning of the 27th ult., my attention being called to the loss by my clerk, Mr. McAllister, saw a broken glass in a back door of cutting room. I first saw and identified the goods at the Police station in Belleville. I saw the prisoner here under arrest. I had a conversation with him in the cars. He said they were my goods, that he and one Robinson had taken them from my shop about 2 a. m. on the 27th June. He enumerated the articles, also a shirt and a pair of kid gloves which are not here. It was his partner who took them. I identify the goods in court as mine. They consist of 6 neckties, 1 1/2 pair of braces, 2 tweed coats, 2 worsted coats, 5 tweed vests, and silk velvet vest, 5 pair of tweed pants, and 6 white shirts. The prisoner said that he broke the pane of glass, that he then reached up and pulled down the oil, and cut a notch in a broom handle and with it pulled up the lower bolt, and while he held it up, his companion pushed to door open. Jos. McAllister clerk sworn—I missed several articles of clothing and shirts at 6 30 a. m., on the 27th. I slept upstairs, Mr. Jno. Paisley first called my attention to the back door being open. I found a pane of glass broken through with one bolt was drawn, tried and found I could draw the upper bolt through it, found a broom handle with a notch cut in it, Mr. Spencer was away. "Alive and kicking," at Flinton, alive with bugs, and hoppers, and the farmers, kicking against them, and kicking their tails, with Paris Green.

I think, King Lear is made to say, "rain cats and dogs," and somebody else, adds, "pitchforks perpendicular," well, it has at Flinton, during this last week, been metaphorically speaking, raining "cats and dogs," but as to the pitchforks, we've got plenty, more than there will be use for, if the hoppers, get their own way, already some of the farmers have had to mow their meadows to save them.

This thirsty sandy land has been very much refreshed, and already, the desert is beginning to bloom, as the rose, and things in general look pretty well, especially the rye, in fact the "bloom is on the rye" now, but it won't be long though, it will be transferred to the nose. Flinton's such a dry and thirsty place, "forty rods," in great demand, all the year round.

Most of the men have returned from river driving, and are again off into the woods, to make ready for the next winter.

Thomas' Electric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE Throat. One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of Piles and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of SIX OF THE BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

Cows ruminate as they stand in the cooling waters. Swine revel in the mire. The insect tribe alone seem to rejoice and to maintain their activity, during the scorching hour of noon. In this month evaporation proceeds with increasing rapidity. The rivers are decreasing, and the brooks are drying up. Nevertheless, the moisture of earth though exhaled is not lost. Attracted to the higher regions of the atmosphere, it is detained awhile for to moderate the fierceness of the Solar rays, and then deposited in the form of dew, or distilled in copious rain. The atmospheric changes of this month, are numerous and important. Electricity is now exerting its powerful agency, and giving proofs of its energy in the pealing thunder, and the vivid lightning. Such as that which surrounded us lately. The approach of the thunder-storm is indicated, by the sultry heat, the darkened sky, and the oppressive air. A profound stillness reigns. Every eye is directed to the heavens. Hope and fear alternate in every breast. At length the moment arrives, the lightning flashes through the air, and the thunder rolls impetuously along the sky. Science may explain the causes of the thunder-storm, and demonstrate its advantages, yet, but few persons can witness its awful phenomena, without some fearful emotions, arising either from an apprehension of some immediate danger, or from the anticipation of future judgment. There are never-failing intimations, that spring has passed away, and summer has assumed her reign. The young shoots of trees and shrubs, have now attained their full growth, and accessions are daily making to the list of ripening summer fruits. At present the days have attained their utmost length, and begin to decline. So quickly the seasons succeed each other; and so quickly pass away the years that compose the life of man! Nothing in this world is stationary; least of all, human circumstance, and human character. The former having reached their zenith, in some way or other decline, the latter, when it arrives at its zenith, whether of

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common SORE Throat, One bottle has cured BRONCHITIS. Fifty cents' worth has cured an OLD STANDING COUGH. One or two bottles cures bad cases of PILES and KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAME BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nunda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of Six of the BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

Beware of IMITATIONS.—Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, Ont., Proprietors for the Dominion.

THE PLACE TO BUY GOODS FOR CASH AT CASH PRICE

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

FROM THE FAR WEST.

(Correspondence of the Winnipeg Free Press.)

I promised last November to send something to you for the benefit of your readers respecting the prospects for farming, stock-raising, &c., in this northern part of the North-west Territories.

As regards farming, of course I have not been here long enough to raise a crop, and thus speak positively of what I know can be done, but enough has been seen to convince me that good crops can be raised. It will be remembered by some persons that this section of country was visited last summer by an unprecedented hailstorm, which cut down every kind of grain and vegetables to the ground; still there was a fair yield of everything which grew after the storm. All the barley I have seen, which grew in this place, weighed 46 lbs per bushel, some from White Fish Lake weighed 52; a quantity of wheat from the same place was as plump and clean as any I have seen grow in Manitoba. There were sixty bushels of turnips growing in the mission field when I arrived, and considering the severe handling they received from the storm, the yield was excellent, as there were some very large, and all sound and good. The soil around this place is of a most excellent quality, reminding one of the settlement belt from Poplar Point to Rat Creek. In conjunction with the teacher connected with the mission I broke seven acres this spring, and have sown oats and barley upon it, with every prospect of a good crop. It would have delighted the hearts of some of my friends in Red River to see the rich black loam turned up for the first time to the light of day. I hope in a few months to be able to speak definitely of what can be raised in this place, as I am trying wheat as well as oats and barley, for which I paid $5 per bushel, barley $3, and oats cannot be bought, as none are raised here as yet.

Barley flour, made from barley raised here, sold readily this winter for $12 per 100 lbs; wheat flour, brought from Red River, sold for $25; sugar, 50c; rice 50c; butter, 50c; tea, $1; salt, 25c; powder, $1 shot, 50c. These are the selling prices, and cannot be got for less. If any farmers think of coming here provisions for at least twelve months should be brought, as also cows, oxen, plough, and harrow; common cows sell for $50 to $60, oxen from $75 to $100.

With regard to stock raising, this country excels in the abundance of hay and the unlimited supply of pasture. The upland hay grows from two to four feet in height and is largely mixed with pea vine; then the swamps are innumerable in which can be cut the blue grass. Horses remain out as a rule all winter, and only in February and March is it necessary to feed them hay; my own mare which was always stabled and fed grain as well as hay while in Manitoba, was out all winter and when brought home in the spring was fat; the oxen and cows have been feeding out since 1st of April. This has, it is true, been a mild winter, as the lowest cold we had was 23° below zero and that only twice all winter; yet still the cattle refused hay and took to the hills as soon as the snow begins to melt away. The Saskatchewan was open on the 9th of April, several days earlier than it has been for a number of years. Without any previous notice the ice began to move and in less than five minutes it was bounding along at the rate of seven or eight miles an hour.

We were shocked on our arrival here last fall to hear of a horrible murder committed by a French half breed named Lepatus, near Lake la Biche, 80 miles to the north-east of the place; not satisfied with his wife he determined to murder

We were shocked on our arrival here last fall to hear of a horrible murder committed by a French half breed named Lepause, near Lake la Biche, 80 miles to the north-east of the place; not satisfied with his wife he determined to have a younger sister, so while visiting his father-in-law he persuaded the old man and woman to go with him to hunt, and on the first opportunity presenting itself shot his father-in-law dead, struck his mother-in-law with his gun, and left her for dead, then raced off with the daughter, compelling her, it is said, to go with him. All winter he has evaded the police sent out by the energetic Col. Jarvis to capture him; at any rate he was taken very unwell, and had to be brought in from his trapping on a sled to his father's house, where he was secured by the police, and is now lying at Fort Saskatchewan awaiting his trial. I never saw a people so impregnated with a wholesome fear of the authorities as they are in this place.

JOHN WALTON,
Victoria, N. W. T., May 4th, 1877.

Relative Values of Corn and Pork

"There have been various careful tests as to how much pork a bushel of corn will make. It seems to be conceded that with the best breed of hogs and the greatest care in feeding there may be certainly eight and a half pounds to the bushel. With this data it is for a farmer to know what he is doing as well as what is best to do. He will see at once if corn is twenty-five cents per bushel and hogs five cents, he should sell hogs and not corn. But if corn be fifty cents and hogs five cents, it is profitable to sell corn. Corn at forty-five cents and pork at five cents, they are equal. And in this way a farmer can easily decide what to do. Or in other words find out what he can obtain for his corn, then multiply the price of corn by eight and a half, and he can at once see which is the most profitable. Pork ought to be the standard by which to ascertain the price of corn, and not by what they will give at the railroad station. We have seen frequent

JOHN WALTON,

"There have been various careful tests as to how much pork a bushel of corn will make. It seems to be conceded that with the best breed of hogs and the greatest care in feeding there may be certainly eight and a half pounds to the bushel. With this data it is for a farmer to know what he is doing as well as what is best to do. He will see at once if corn is twenty-five cents per bushel and hogs five cents, he should sell hogs and not corn. But if corn be fifty cents and hogs five cents, it is profitable to sell corn. Corn at forty-five cents and pork at five cents, they are equal. And in this way a farmer can easily decide what to do. Or in other words find out what he can obtain for his corn, then multiply the price of corn by eight and a half, and he can at once see which is the most profitable. Pork ought to be the standard by which to ascertain the price of corn, and not by what they will give at the railroad station. We have said frequently that most farmers do not know whether they are making or losing money, for the reason that they do not make any effort to know what their wheat, corn, pork, or beef costs. But when they have the raw material on hand they should carefully ascertain what is best to do with it. And the rule which we here present to them will solve the question of what to do with their corn. But in these calculations we make no allowance for the poor breeds of hogs or for careless feeding or indifferent quarters for the comfort and improvement of the animals. All these must be taken into account. Some men by a slipshod system of feeding and bad treatment do not get five cents per bushel for corn.—Iowa State Register.

Potato Beetles.

The following compound, recommended by a French chemist several years since, may be worth trying on potatoes for destroying the potato beetle. Take 2½ lbs. of black soap, 2½ lbs. of flour of sulphur, 2 lbs. of mushrooms, of the species generally found in low, moist grounds, and 30 quarts of water. Divide the water into two equal parts; put one-half into the cask with the soap and mushrooms, after they have been bruised; boil the other half of the water in a kettle, with the sulphur in a bag and kept down to the bottom of the water with a weight. The sulphur must be stirred about, in order to better saturate the water. The water thus boiled must be thrown into an ordinary sized cask until it has acquired a high degree of foul odor and the cask then closed up tightly. This solution may be sprinkled over infested trees, or plants of any kind, and it is said to be certain death to all kinds of insects.

WHAT MAKES A CAR LOAD.—Nominally an American car load is 20,000 pounds. It is also 70 barrels of salt, 70 of lime, 90 of flour, 60 of whiskey, 200 sacks of flour 6 cords of soft wood, 15 or 20 head of cattle, 20 or 60 head of hogs, 80 or 100 head of sheep, 6,000 feet of solid boards, 340 bushels of wheat, 400 of corn, 680 of oats, 400 of barley, 360 of flax seed, 860 of apples, 430 of potatoes, 300 of sweet potatoes, 1,000 bushels of bran 130 to 190 barrels of eggs, and 15,000 to 26,000 pounds of butter.

At the June cattle fair, Mount Forest, Oxen per yoke $0 to $110; steers, each $1, 85 to $50; milk cows, 22 to $35.

In Chicago, Toledo, Cincinnati and several other cities in the Western States a terrible wind and rainstorm on the 25th destroyed buildings, bridges, &c. The wind carrying the roofs a great distance from the scene of disaster, in one place a locomotive and train was blown from the track. Estimated loss $5,000,000.

The damage to estancias and sheep farms has been immense. The losses of cattle, horses, and sheep amount to hundreds of thousands, if not millions.

VINCENNES, Ind., June 22.—A party of vigilants rode into Mitchell, Ind., last night, erected a scaffold in the middle of the town, and hung two effigies with a notice pinned on them, reciting a conviction of a portion of the band of outlaws, and warning those at large that the next overt act committed would be met with terrible vengeance.

Seven steamships sailed from New York for Europe, taking twelve Presbyterian divines to the Council at Edinburgh, several army officers who proceed to the seat of war for observation, and long lists of other passengers. They all take pretty full cargoes, including 65,000 boxes of cheese, 5,000 packages of butter, 151,000 bushels of grain, large quantities of meats and produce, 250 head of cattle, and a few horses.

The Peruvian rebel ironclad Huascar, which surrendered to the Government squadron did so to avoid capture by the British war vessels Shah and Amethyst, who had previously fired on her on account of depredations on British vessels. The citizens of Iquique became much excited at British interference and a general tumult was only prevented by the timely arrival of troops who dispersed the rioters.

The Army and Navy Gazette says that all regiments will in future have an establishment of ten lieutenants, exclusive of the adjutant, those on foreign service being allowed eight, and those on home service four second lieutenants, who will have to await promotion until vacancies occur in the higher rank. This change will give universal satisfaction, as a break will thus be provided in the subaltern ranks, the want of which was a standing argument against the sublieutenancy system.

Washington despatches say Dr. Lindemann, Director of Mint, thinks there will be in the near future a relaxation in the European demand for gold for coinage sufficient to prevent the accumulation of gold required for resumption in the United States. Lindemann founds this opinion chiefly on fact that Great Britain, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium and the Scandinavian States are all amply supplied with gold, and Russia, Austria, Italy and Spain will be compelled for some years to adhere to irredeemable paper money.

Few people know that there are hardly twenty genuine Newfoundland dogs in this country. The name and breed are so popular and familiar that to all but an extremely small minority the assertion will appear absurd. Nevertheless it is strictly correct. The thoroughbred Newfoundland dog has been gradually losing his identity through miscegenation. The secret of his fast approaching extinction not being more easily observed, lies in the fact that after a mixture of breed between a Newfoundland and any other species, more of the form and character of the latter descend to the offspring than occurs in any other instance of interbreeding among dogs.

ST. ALBANS, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.
DEAR SIR,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 38 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely to God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,
HENRY SMITH.

Persons Sickened Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, Droppings in Throat Disappeared.
ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1878.

J. B. HARDING writes—Being desirous that others may know some of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I have to inform you what it has done for me. I am 58, I had been out of health for about five years. I employed three or four different doctors, and tried medicines without receiving any permanent benefit, continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I came so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at all. I had severe aches and pains under the shoulder and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and in my right lung as though there was a weight in it, with continual droppings in the throat and upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I came to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which gave me an improved appetite, and clearing four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping clearing land, at which I have been engaged the season. My recovery I attribute solely with God's aid, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,
HENRY SNIDER

have recently published a new edition (Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated) of the radical and permanent cure (ethical) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Impediments to Marriage, resulting from excesses. Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or stage stamps. The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay, demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences radically cured without the dangerous internal medicine or the application of force; pointing out a mode of cure at once certain and effectual, by means of which sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, can cure himself cheaply, privately and radically. This Lecture should be in the hands of youth and every man in the land.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CUTLER.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added), who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

THE MARCHIONESS OF MUE

Poisoning as a Fine Art

CHAPTER II.

Marguerite's hunger for devilish ledge was still unsated. She made trials, giving the powder in biscuit her guests and to her chamber-maid were very sick, and suffered greatly only a few died, the preparation too weak for general slaughter. dose was not intended to be fatal; could practice her baleful chemistry out necessary assassination. To be lately certain of her drugs, she swallowed herself, and, after feeling the force and effect, she took an ant compounded by her associate in crime and was ready at last to devote her talent to her family. Her father the first victim. She poisoned his pillow, resolved she said, never leave him until he was better. Time blessed her for her goodness, as he received all his nourishment from hands. She daintily poisoned his soup, his wine, and he grew weak gradually that his physicians, with usual sagacity, made a diagnosis case, and determined the exact nature of his disease. Eight months was the fixed on to finish him; but they died so that she got impatient, and by doing his doses she had him arrayed in coffin in as many weeks. She came with one hand and poisoned with the other. Her filial affection led him to the soul. He breathed his on her tender bosom, and his final were, "My beloved child, I shall see you in heaven?"

The funeral of the elder Aubrey brought his two sons from Norman the capital; but they came to their Obligation to stay until certain forms respecting the estate were complied. Sainte Croix furnished them with a vault, Lachausse, a willing tool of and a proficient in the black art, whose agency they were buried in eight weeks. The strange morbid among the Aubreys now excited suspicion; but so skillfully had every been done that there was no person suspect. The marchioness still his sister, who would inherit half the property; but as the greedy paramour wanted it all, he planned the latter's taking. Her fears saved her; she seized the first opportunity to quit Paris, and machinations became powerless.

The faithless wife and murder daughter had slain her nearest kin in behalf of her lover; she was now anxious to slay her husband on her own account. He had not troubled her their separation; but she wanted to freed from him wholly that she might marry Sainte-Croix, whom she still loved with intense passionateness. knowing how to obtain a divorce, naturally not wishing to appear in courts under the circumstances, the best way seemed to sprinkle his path the cemetery with the mystic powder. Her lover shared her secret, but not passion—he had tired of her—though pretended to approve her purpose. ing, if balked in her desire and affected that she might give him his quietus is quite likely, too, that he may have rejected to her as a wife on general principles. He was bad enough, without caring her with him by any legal tie; a must be acknowledged that her fashions were not precisely of a moral Men ordinarily, however depraved not won by depravity in women; and is not singular that the pupil of Evil averse to making his mistress Mac Sainte-Croix. He kept his aversion himself, however, and outwardly coqueted with her in her enterprise to widowhood.

She showed a new interest in her whose fondness for her had revived ing their life apart. She invited him spend the evening with her; she all

The faithless wife and murderer's daughter had slain her nearest kinsman in behalf of her lover; she was now anxious to slay her husband on her own account. He had not troubled her since their separation; but she wanted to be freed from him wholly that she might marry Sainte-Croix, whom she still loved with intense passionateness. Not knowing how to obtain a divorce, and naturally not wishing to appear in the courts under the circumstances, the easiest way seemed to sprinkle his path to the cemetery with the mystic powder. Her lover shared her secret, but not her passion—he had tired of her—though he pretended to approve her purpose, fearing, if balked in her desire and affection that she might give him his quietus, is quite likely, too, that he may have objected to her as a wife on general principles. He was bad enough, without coupling her with him by any legal tie; and must be acknowledged that her fascinations were not precisely of a moral sort. Men ordinarily, however depraved, are not won by depravity in women; and it is not singular that the pupil of Evil was averse to making his mistress, Madame Sainte-Croix. He kept his aversion to himself, however, and outwardly co-operated with her in her enterprise toward widowhood.

She showed a new interest in her life whose fondness for her had revived during their life apart. She invited him to spend the evening with her; she allowed him to caress her—a privilege he had learned to value from its infrequency—and he enjoyed her society so much that she was impelled to moderate his transports with some of her strongest poison. The marquis, who appears to have been an easy, self-indulgent, sensual soul, had never had the least surmise of his wife's homicidal habit. Consequently, when she offered him food, seasoned with the powder, he accepted it with a ratiobow, and ate it with particular relish. Before he had been materially hurt by it, Sainte-Croix would stealthily give him an antidote; knowing that to preserve his life was to preserve his own freedom and of his knowledge earnestness an enthusiasm were born. Marguerite continued to administer her doses, and Gaudin his remedies; the husband never dreaming that death was playing at hide-and-seek in his vitals, and his wife wondering why he did not yield to her potent drugs. This kind of employment, pleasant as it may have been to them, could not have been altogether delightful to the object. He had a very vigorous constitution, despite his abuse of it; but he would have needed a copper stomach an iron lungs, with a physical organization of the toughest brass, to withstand these continuous assaults upon his life. On day he swallowed the bane, next day the antidote, and so it went on for weeks at months, to the serious detriment of the marquis's tissues and to the amazement of the marchioness. Believing her powders had lost their virtues—recoiled—she made her portions larger and stronger; and it can hardly be supposed that the unhappy gentleman who was the recipient of her favors was benefitted by her renewed determination to exterminate him.

Sainte-Croix was equally energetic on the other side, and between the slayer and savior, Bruvilliers—so to speak—pushed into the grave in the morning

Signs of Death

The yellow white birds to know,
The mellow black-bird, the dove to hear;
The quail, the duck, the sea-fowl cry,
The distant hills are looking high;
How restless are the snorting swine!
The busy flies disturb the kine!
Low o'er the grass the swallow wings;
The cricket, too, how sharp he sings!
Puss on the hearth, with velvet paws,
Sit swiping o'er her whiskered jaws;
The smoke from chimneys right ascends,
Then spreading back to earth it bends;
The wind, unsteady, veers around,
Or setting in the south is found.
Through the clear stream the fishes rise,
And nimbly catch the cautious flies.
The glow-worms, numerous, clear, and bright,
Illumed the dewy hills last night;
At dusk the squalid toad was seen
Like quadruped, stalk o'er the green.
The whirling wind the dust obeys.
And in the rapid eddy plays;
The frog has changed his yellow vest
And in a russet coat is dressed;
The sky is green, the air is still,
The mellow black-bird's voice is shrill;
The dog, so altered in his taste,
Quite nuzzles noses on grass to feast.
Behold the rooks, how odd their flight!
They imitate the sliding kite,
And seem precipitate to fall
As if they felt the piercing ball.
The tender colts on backs do lie,
Nor heed the traveller passing by;
In frey red the sun did rise
Then wades through clouds to meet the skies.
'Twill surely rain—we see't with sorrow—
No working in the fields to-morrow.

THE MARCHIONESS OF MURDER.

Poisoning as a Fine Art.

CHAPTER II.

Marguerite's hunger for devilish knowledge was still unsated. She made more trials, giving the powder in biscuits to her guests and to her chamber-maid. All were very sick, and suffered greatly; but only a few died, the preparation being too weak for general slaughter. One dose was not intended to be fatal; so she could practice her baleful chemistry without necessary assassination. To be absolutely certain of her drugs, she swallowed them herself, and, after feeling their full force and effect, she took an antidote, compounded by her associate in iniquity, and was ready at last to devote her trained talent to her family. Her father was the first victim. She poisoned his chocolate, and the next day he was confined to his bed. She manifested great surprise and solicitude, and took her place beside his pillow, resolved she said, never to leave him until he was better. The old man blessed her for her goodness, and received all his nourishment from her hands. She daintily poisoned his coffee, his soup, his wine, and he grew worse so gradually that his physicians, with the usual sagacity, made a diagnosis of his disease. Eight months was the time fixed on to finish him; but they dragged so that she got impatient, and, by doubling his doses she had him arrayed for his coffin in as many weeks. She caressed him with one hand and poisoned him and dragged out to the execution, day by day. He was a capital subject, and the day following, because little else than a compound of poison and a willing ghost. He was a capital subject, and the day following, because little else than a compound of poison and a willing ghost. He was a capital subject, and the day following, because little else than a compound of poison and a willing ghost.

The day of retribution was at hand. An odd chance brought crimes to light which human vigilance had been unable to detect. Sainte-Croix had a secret laboratory, where he was in the habit of preparing his poisons, which were so deadly that he was compelled to wear a glass mask to prevent his inhaling the fumes. One day his mask slipped off, and the noxious vapors caused his death almost instantly. The next morning his corpse was accidentally discovered in the obscure and dingy place in a remote quarter of the city, amid mysterious packets, jars, vials, blowpipes, furnaces, crucibles, and retorts. No one had known anything of the work-room; no one knew anything of him, as there was nothing on or about his person to identify him. But the place and circumstances were so conspicuous that the police took charge of the body and the laboratory. They were not long in finding a casket, accompanied with a letter, earnestly urging that it should be immediately sent, without opening, to Madame de Brinvilliers, giving her address. The letter, dated Paris, May 25, 1672, has this strange wording:

"I entreat that any one into whose hands this casket may fall will have the kindness to deliver it in person to the Marchioness de Brinvilliers, residence in the Rue Neuve de St. Paul, and to her alone. Everything it contains belongs exclusively to her, and concerns her only; moreover, nothing in it can be of the least use to anybody but her. If she should die before me, it is my most earnest wish that the casket and its contents shall be promptly burned without opening. I solemnly swear, by the God I adore, that I assert nothing but the truth. If my request and prayer be not strictly complied with, I charge the conscience of the non-complier with the responsibility both here and hereafter, that I may fully acquit my own."

This appeal excited curiosity and suspicion, instead of inspiring obedience to the appeal. The casket was officially sealed; but, having been duly opened, was found to contain some instruments in writing, with a number of vials and powders carefully wrapped in paper. Among the writings was a promissory note for thirty thousand livres, which Sainte-Croix had exacted of his mistress as a recompense of his crimes; certain inferential implications of the Marchioness in the recent murders, and many of

The Paris Mass Murders

Young Charley (Emma) was married about a month ago, and when he came back from his wedding tour, he said his pretty little wife Emma took somewhat of a fancy for the theatre. Early on evening, after they were fairly settled, and the last of Emma's sisters had been induced to conclude her visit, Charley proposed to Emma that they should go to the theatre. The little woman consented and they both began to amend their toilette. In a few moments Charley said: "Darling, I am sorry to trouble you, but really I think I shall be obliged to ask you to sew a button on this shirt."

"Of course; why not?" said Emma, delighted at a chance to show her skill. She took the garment, seated herself and said:—"I can't remember for the life of me where I put those buttons. Charley, look in that box and see if you can find one."

Charley looked in the box, which was a case of perfume bottles, and not finding the desired article, concluded he would not bother Emma for further information, so he pulled a button from another shirt.

"Now, Charley," said Emma, "look in the top bureau drawer and get me a paper of needles and a spool of white cotton—be sure to get the white cotton."

Charley found in a top bureau drawer a copy of Tennyson—he remembered it well, and picked it up and looked at the marginal marks and comments, dear affectionate little girl that she was!—and more perfume bottles, and a pattern of a Flora de Fumar overshirt and the beginning of a sofa cushion and various other things, but no needle or cotton. Then he remembered that he had a fancy "housewife" that he had bought from a girl at a fair, and he got needles and cotton out of that.

"Thank you dear," said Emma, as she began to stitch vigorously, humming a dreamy Italian air. Presently she said:—"Oh, Charley, won't you bring me my scissors. I thing they're in my writing desk. I had them there to-day cutting a poem out of a paper."

The scissors were not in the writing desk, nor on the mantle, nor in the top bureau drawer, nor in the case of perfume bottles, nor even in the hair receiver, so Charley drew on his "housewife" again. Emma took the scissors, snipped the thread and exclaimed, "There, darling! now make haste or we shall be late."

Charley wriggled into the garment and then put up his hands to button the band at the back, but no button was there.

"Why, Em," he cried, "where in thunder did you sew on that button?"

"Oh, Charley, ain't you ashamed?" exclaimed his wife, "Where are your eyes?"

"If they were in the back of my head," answered Charley, perhaps I could see that button!"

Emma raised herself on her tiptoes and looked at the band.

"Why that's strange!" said she. "Take it off and let me look at it."

The shirt was inspected thoroughly, and the button found neatly and deftly sewed on just beneath the tag of the shirt bosom so as to button to that appendage

 and was ready at last to devote her trained talent to her family. Her father was the first victim. She poisoned his chocolate, and the next day he was confined to his bed. She manifested great surprise and solicitude, and took her place beside his pillow, resolved she said, never to leave him until he was better. The old man blessed her for her goodness, and received all his nourishment from her hands. She daintily poisoned his coffee, his soup, his wine, and he grew worse so gradually that his physicians, with the usual sagacity, made a diagnosis of his case, and determined the exact nature of his disease. Eight months was the time fixed on to finish him; but they dragged
 so that she got impatient, and by doubling his doses she had him arrayed for his coffin in as many weeks. She caressed him with one hand and poisoned him with the other. Her filial affection mor-eled him to the soul. He breathed his last on her tender bosom, and his final words were, "My beloved child, I shall wait for you in heaven?"

The funeral of the elder Aubray brought his two sons from Normandy to the capital; but they came to their doom.
 Obligated to stay until certain formalities
 respecting the estate were complied with,
 Sainte-Croix furnished them with a servant, Lachaussee, a willing tool of his,
 and a proficient in the black art, by whose agency they were buried within eight weeks. The strange mortality among the Aubrays now excited suspicion; but so skillfully had everything been done that there was no person to suspect. The marchioness still had a sister, who would inherit half the property; but as the greedy paramour wanted
 it all, he planned the latter's taking-off.
 Her fears saved her; she seized the earliest opportunity to quit Paris, and his machinations became powerless.

The faithless wife and murderous daughter had slain her nearest kinsmen in behalf of her lover; she was now anxious to slay her husband on her own account. He had not troubled her since their separation; but she wanted to be freed from him wholly that she might marry Sainte-Croix, whom she still loved with intense passionateness. Not knowing how to obtain a divorce, and naturally not wishing to appear in the courts under the circumstances, the easiest way seemed to sprinkle his path to the cemetery with the mystic powder.
 Her lover shared her secret, but not her passion—he had tired of her—though he pretended to approve her purpose, fearing, if balked in her desire and affection, that she might give him his quietus. It is quite likely, too, that he may have objected to her as a wife on general principles. He was bad enough, without complying her with him by any legal tie; and it must be acknowledged that her fascinations were not precisely of a moral sort.
 Men ordinarily, however depraved, are not won by depravity in women; and it is not singular that the pupil of Exilii was averse to making his mistress, Madame Sainte-Croix. He kept his aversion to himself, however, and outwardly co-operated with her in her enterprise toward widowhood.

She showed a new interest in her liege,
 whose fondness for her had revived during their life apart. She invited him to spend the evening with her; she allowed him to dress her—a privilege he had learned to value from its infrequency—
 and he enjoyed her society so much that was so conspicuous that the police took charge of the body and the laboratory.

 They were not long in finding a casket,
 accompanied with a letter, earnestly urging that it should be immediately sent,
 without opening, to Madame de Brinvilliers, giving her address. The letter, dated Paris, May 25, 1672, has this strange wording:

"I entreat that any one into whose hands this casket may fall will have the kindness to deliver it in person to the Marchioness de Brinvilliers, residence in the Rue Neuve de St. Paul, and to her alone. Everything it contains belongs exclusively to her, and concerns her only;
 moreover, nothing in it can be of the least use to anybody but her. If she should die before me, it is my most earnest wish that the casket and its contents shall be promptly burned without opening. I solemnly swear, by the God I adore, that I assert nothing but the truth. If my request and prayer be not strictly complied with, I charge the conscience of the noncomplier with the responsibility both here and hereafter, that I may fully acquit
 my own."

This appeal excited curiosity and suspicion, instead of inspiring obedience to the appeal. The casket was officially sealed; but, having been duly opened,
 was found to contain some instruments
 in writing, with a number of vials and powders carefully wrapped in paper.
 Among the writings was a promissory note for thirty thousand livres, which Sainte-Croix had exacted of his mistress
 as a recompense of his crimes; certain inferential implications of the Marchioness in the recent murders, and many of her passionate love-letters to her dead gallant. The contents of the vials and papers on analysis proved to be subtle poisons. Some of the papers were labeled, and the labels mentioned the exact effect which the different poisons ought to produce. As soon as the Marchioness had heard of her accomplice's death, she tried to get possession of the casket (this was before it had been opened); but when it was refused, she took alarm, and fled at once to England. She was none too quick; the police were already on her track, and only a few hours behind her. Having been appraised of this, she laughed, saying that one woman could outwit a dozen men, and that she had been born to good luck.

Notwithstanding the many circumstances pointing to her guilt, there had been,
 up to this time, no absolute proof. But,
 as fortune would have it, Lachaussee,
 the servant who had been employed to make away with her two brothers, protested against the seals placed upon Sainte-Croix's effects, claiming that the deceased owed him a considerable sum for services rendered. The wretch felt so secure that he belied himself in no danger from this audacious demand. But the attention of Madame de Villars, widow of one of the poisoned Aubray brothers,
 having been thus drawn to the man
 she had long suspected as conniving
 at her husband's death, she caused Lachaussee's arrest on that charge. The moment he was confronted with justice
 he became terribly frightened, and lost all self-control. He made full confession of having murdered the brothers; that he had been hired to do the deed by Sainte-Croix and Madame de Brinvilliers; and furnished many convincing details. He was condemned to be executed, and he lost his head (March, 1673) on the Place
 de Greve (now the Place de l'Hotel-de-Ville). His confession and trial created great excitement in Paris, and a vast concourse of people witnessed the execution.
 The flight of the marchioness corroborated
 all the other testimony against her,
 and she was also sentenced by default (par contumace) to be beheaded. This troubled her very little, however, as she was living under an assumed name
 in London, and, as she remarked, a long axe would be needed to reach from the capital of France to the capital of England.

Until the death of Sainte-Croix and the execution of Lachaussee, their peculiar poisoning had been an occult art in France; but so much was then published of their dreadful secrets and mode of operation, that inheritance-powder was beginning of a sofa cushion and various other things, but no needle or cotton.

 Then he remembered that he had a fancy
 "housewife" that he had bought from a girl at a fair, and he got needles and cotton out of that.

"Thank you dear," said Emma, as she began to stitch vigorously, humming a dreamy Italian air. Presently she said:
 "Oh, Charley, won't you bring me my scissors. I thing they're in my writing desk. I had them there to-day cutting a poem out of a paper."

The scissors were not in the writing
 desk, nor on the mantle, nor in the top
 bureau drawer, nor in the case of perfume
 bottles, nor even in the hair receiver, so
 Charley drew on his "housewife" again.
 Emma took the scissors, snipped the thread
 and exclaimed, "There, darling," now
 make haste or we shall be late."

Charley wriggled into the garment and
 then put up his hands to button the band
 at the back, but no button was there.

"Why, Em," he cried, "where in thunder did you sew on that button?"

"Oh, Charley, ain't you ashamed!" exclaimed his wife, "Where are your eyes?"

"If they were in the back of my head,"
 answered Charley, perhaps I could see
 that button."

Emma raised herself on her tiptoes and
 looked at the band.

"Why that's strange!" said she. "Take
 it off and let me look at it."

The shirt was inspected thoroughly,
 and the button found neatly and deftly
 sewed on just beneath the tag of the shirt
 bosom so as to button to that appendage
 in a most elegant manner.

"Well, by Jove," exclaimed Charley, "if I didn't know any more about sewing
 a button than that I wouldn't get married now."

"You were going to say you wouldn't have got married," cried his wife, putting on her hat hastily and bursting into tears.

"Where are you going?" demanded
 Charley savagely.

"I'm going home, and I'll get a separation from you and your shirts; that's where I'm goin'," blubbered Emma. "I thought you wanted the button there to fasten your what-you-call-ems."

It took Charley an hour to persuade Emma that if she went home there wouldn't be strawberries and cream enough to go around, and that she could get all she wanted at Delmonico's, and he'd pay for it.—Reading Eagle.

The American Game Chicken

A practical joke was played nearly thirty years ago at a cocking main in Havana, by some sailors belonging to an American man-of-war. The sailors had been betting and losing, day after day,
 at the cock pit, which was the amusement
 they most affected, until they were all left without a cent. In that plight the sailors were when the man-of-war was ordered off to San Francisco. A number of months afterwards the vessel returned to Havana, and the Jack Tars had fully matured a scheme for vengeance. Drawing all their pay, and borrowing all the money they could in addition, at the first
 shore leave they started for the cock pit,
 carrying with them their gold and a bag
 about which they preserved a good deal of mystery. Some of the ship's officers, supposing that something was in the wind, followed, but not to them even was the secret divulged. Scarcely had they reached the pit when an excited Spaniard sprang into the little arena, where a battle had just ended. Under his left arm he carried a magnificent game-cock, in his right hand he flourished a bag of doubloons, and he yelled forth a challenge on behalf of his bird against "anything that wore feathers."

No other challenge could have been half so welcome to the sailors, for during their former unhappy experience he had been their bet non raking in their gold pieces almost as fast as they could bet them. His verbose and grandiloquent defiance was promptly accepted, the money was staked, and the Americans shook their champion out of their mysterious bag. A nondescript creature it was.

Consequently, when she offered him food, seasoned with the powder, he accepted it with a stately bow, and ate it with particular relish. Before he had been materially hurt by it, Sainte-Croix would stealthily give him an antidote; knowing that to preserve his life was to preserve his own freedom; and of this knowledge earnestness and enthusiasm were born. Marguerite continued to administer her doses, and Gaudin his remedies; the husband never dreaming that death was playing at hide-and-seek in his vitals, and his wife wondering why he did not yield to her potent drugs. This kind of employment, pleasant as it may have been to them, could not have been altogether delightful to its object. He had a very vigorous constitution, despite his abuse of it; but he would have needed a copper stomach and iron lungs, with a physical organization of the toughest brass, to withstand these continuous assaults upon his life. One day he swallowed the bane, next day the antidote, and so it went on for weeks and months, to the serious detriment of the marquis's tissues and to the amazement of the marchioness. Believing her powders had lost their virtues—or vices—she made her potions larger and stronger; and it can hardly be supposed that the unhappy gentleman who was the recipient of her favors was benefitted by her renewed determination to exting-

when it was refused, she took alarm, and fled at once to England. She was none too quick; the police were already on her track, and only a few hours behind her. Having been apprised of this, she laughed, saying that one woman could outwit a dozen men, and that she had been born to good luck.

Notwithstanding the many circumstances pointing to her guilt, there had been, up to this time, no absolute proof. But, as fortune would have it, Lachaussee, the servant who had been employed to make away with her two brothers, protested against the seals placed upon Sainte-Croix's effects, claiming that the deceased owed him a considerable sum for services rendered. The wretch felt so secure that he believed himself in no danger from this audacious demand. But the attention of Madame de Villars, widow of one of the poisoned Aubray brothers, having been thus drawn to the man she had long suspected as conniving at her husband's death, she caused Lachaussee's arrest on that charge. The moment he was confronted with justice, he became terribly frightened, and lost all self-control. He made full confession of having murdered the brothers; that he had been hired to do the deed by Sainte-Croix and Madame de Brinvilliers; and furnished many convincing details. He was condemned to be executed, and he lost his head (March, 1679) on the Place de Greve (now the Place de l'Hotel-de-Ville). His confession and trial created great excitement in Paris, and a vast concourse of people witnessed the execution. The flight of the marchioness corroborated all the other testimony against her, and she was also sentenced by default (par contumace) to be beheaded. This troubled her very little, however, as she was living under an assumed name in London, and, as she remarked, a long axe would be needed to reach from the capital of France to the capital of England.

Until the death of Sainte-Croix and the execution of Lachaussee, their peculiar poisoning had been an occult art in France; but so much was then published of their dreadful secrets and mode of operation, that inheritance-powder was widely made and sold, and persons were killed with it all over the kingdom. Their fate did much more harm than good; for, where they and their escaped accomplice had caused the death of one person, the knowledge of the means they had resorted to probably caused the death of hundreds.

Utilising Refuse.
 Manchester, England, is said to have the best managed system of cleansing the city in the world. It is under the charge of a health board, and the theory, upon which it is based is that the official must pay for its own removal. Everything that goes to make dirt and breed disease from tenement-house garbage to paper-rags and broken bottles is collected in waggons and taken to the public yards on the outskirts of the town. Each load, on being dropped, is carefully assorted, and everything which can be worked over into useful commodities is treated in that way in shops owned by the board, the furnaces being run without expense for coal, as the cinders collected supply all necessary fuel. The products of the dirt-heaps include a valuable patent manure, paper-pulp, a disinfecting powder, a kind of mortar which proves to be of great use to builders of brick-work, bone for the mechanical arts, filling for road-beds, and scrap metals of every sort. All the odd bits that can be turned to no good account are passed through a "carbonizer" and reduced to harmlessness; and the whole process, or combination of processes, here described, is conducted without creating any offensive smells or smoke worth mentioning.

Charley savagely.
 'I'm going home, and I'll get a separation from you and your shirts; that's where I'm going,' blubbered Emma. 'I thought you wanted the button there to fasten your what-you-call-em.''
 It took Charley an hour to persuade Emma that if she went home there wouldn't be strawberries and cream enough to go around, and that she could get all she wanted at Delmonico's, and he'd pay for it. —Reading Eagle.

The American Game Chicken
 A practical joke was played nearly thirty years ago at a cocking main in Havana, by some sailors belonging to an American man-of-war. The sailors had been betting and losing, day after day, at the cock pit, which was the amusement they most affected, until they were all left without a cent. In that plight the sailors were when the man-of-war was ordered off to San Francisco. A number of months afterwards the vessel returned to Havana, and the Jack Tars had fully matured a scheme for vengeance. Drawing all their pay, and borrowing all the money they could in addition, at the first shore leave they started for the cock pit, carrying with them their gold and a bag, about which they preserved a good deal of mystery. Some of the ship's officers, surmising that something was in the wind, followed, but not to them even was the secret divulged. Scarcely had they reached the pit when an excited Spaniard sprang into the little arena, where a battle had just ended. Under his left arm he carried a magnificent game-cock, in his right hand he flourished a bag of dabbloons, and he yelled forth a challenge on behalf of his bird against "anything that wore feathers."

No other challenge could have been half so welcome to the sailors, for during their former unhappy experience he had been their bête noir raking in their gold pieces almost as fast as they could bet them. His verbose and grandiloquent defiance was promptly accepted, the money was staked, and the Americans shook their champion out of their mysterious bag. A nondescript creature it was, with a great solid body, roughly covered with chicken feathers and tar, its wings and tail clipped, its head broad and adorned with a keen covered beak, with long, sharp talons at the end of its toes, instead of gaffs upon its legs. Despite its strange hair-disguise, the officers recognized it at once as an American eagle. But the Spaniards knew nothing about it, and the one who had made the match was furious deeming himself insulted by pitting such a miserable-looking creature, against his splendid fowl. The alcade ordered, however, that the fight should take place, according to the terms of the challenge, and the Senor tossed his bird into the pit. It was ready to fight of course for a game cock of good blood would not hesitate to attack a bird as big as the fabled rock. So the first notice the "American game chicken," as the sailors had christened their bird, received of the presence of an enemy was a fierce attack. He calmly looked down upon the game cock strutting threateningly before him. The sailors were not without anxiety unless the keen gaffs might settle their eagle before he got warmed up to his work, but the fear was quickly dispelled. The game cock dashed forward again. In less than a second the Spaniards witnessed an astounding sight. The "American chicken" placidly stretched out one great claw, seized his antagonist by the head, drew him up, and, applying his other claw, to the body, tore his head off with a single pull. Then he proceeded to eat him. A storm of imprecations and shouts of astonishment rent the air but the sailors were too well armed and too numerous for the Spaniards, and so they got their money and returned aboard ship, laden with more gold than they ever before had, and carrying their champion in triumph. —[New York Sun.

The First Great Event.

Young Charley, therefore, was married about a month ago, and when he came back from his wedding tour, he said to his little wife Emma, took possession of a charming flat up town. Early one evening, when they were fairly settled,
and the last of Emma's sisters had been induced to complete her visit, Charley proposed to Emma that they should go to the theatre. The little woman assented and they both began to amend their toilets. In a few moments Charley said:

"Darling, I am sorry to trouble you,
but really I think I shall be obliged to ask you to sew a button on this shirt."

"Of course; why not?" said Emma,
delighted at a chance to show her skill.
She took the garment, seated herself and said:—"I can't remember for the life of me where I put those buttons. Charley, look in that box and see if you can find one."

Charley looked in the box, which was a case of perfume bottles, and not finding the desired article, concluded he would not bother Emma for further information, so he pulled a button from another shirt.

"Now, Charley," said Emma, "look in the top bureau drawer and get me a paper
of needles and a spool of white cotton—
be sure to get the white cotton."

Charley found in a top bureau drawer
a copy of Tennyson—he remembered it well, and picked it up and looked at the marginal marks and comments, dear affectionate little girl that she was!—and more perfume bottles, and a pattern of a Flora de Fumar overshirt and the beginning of a sofa cushion and various other things, but no needle or cotton.
Then he remembered that he had a fancy
"housewife" that he had bought from a
girl at a fair, and he got needles and cotton out of that.

"Thank you dear," said Emma, as she
began to stitch vigorously, humming a
dreamy Italian air. Presently she said:
—"Oh, Charley, won't you bring me my
scissors. I thing they're in my writing desk. I had them there to-day cutting a poem out of a paper."

The scissors were not in the writing
desk, nor on the mantle, nor in the top
bureau drawer, nor in the case of perfume
bottles, nor even in the hair receiver, so
Charley drew on his "housewife" again.
Emma took the scissors, snipped the thread
and exclaimed, "There, darling," now
make haste or we shall be late."

Charley wriggled into the garment and
then put up his hands to button the band
at the back, but no button was there.

"Why, Em," he cried, "where in thunder did you sew on that button?"

"Oh, Charley, ain't you ashamed?" exclaimed his wife. "Where are your
eyes?"

"If they were in the back of my head,"
answered Charley, perhaps I could see
that button."

Emma raised herself on her tiptoes and
looked at the band.

"Why that's strange," said she. "Take
it off and let me look at it."

The shirt was inspected thoroughly,
and the button found neatly and deftly
sewed on just beneath the tag of the shirt
bosom so as to button to that appendage
in a most elegant manner.

Accidents at Southampton.

The following is told by Mr. Rogers:
"I think the most serious fact that I have seen in the history of the Bank of England, was told me by the manager of the Bank of England. Once upon a time, on a certain Saturday night, the folks at the Bank
could not make the balance come out correct by just £100. This is a very common thing in that little establishment. I do not mean the cash, but the arithmetic, for it requires a world of scrutiny. An error in balancing has been known, I am told, to keep a delegation of clerks from each office at work sometimes the whole night. A hue and cry was of course made after this £100 as if the old lady in Treadneedle street would be in the Gazette for want of it. Luckily on Sunday morning, a clerk in the middle of a sermon, I dare say, if the truth were known,
felt a suspicion of the truth flash through his mind quicker than any flash of the telegraph itself. He told the chief cashier that, perhaps the mistake might have occurred in packing some boxes of specie
for the West Indies, which had been sent to Southampton for shipment. The suggestion was immediately acted upon.
Here was a race, lightning against steam!
steam with eight and forty hours the start. Instantly the wires asked 'whether such a vessel had left the harbor?' 'Just weighed anchor,' was the reply. 'Stop her!' frantically shouted the telegraph.
It was so done. 'Heave up on deck certain boxes marked so and so; weigh them carefully.' They were weighed; and one—the delinquent—was found heavier
by just one packet of a hundred sovereigns than it ought to be. 'Let her go,'
said the mysterious telegraph. The West Indies were debited with just £100 more, and the error was corrected without ever looking into the boxes or delaying the voyage an hour. Now that is what we call doing business."

Englishwomen and Politics.

Richard Grant White, in the Galaxy,
thus discusses the comparative interest taken in politics by English and American women:—

It is generally believed in England, I cannot tell why, that women in 'America'
take part in public affairs and are much more in the eye of the world than English women are. Of this belief I met with an amusing instance. One day at dinner in a "great house" I had on one side of me
a gentleman who had come in alone for lack of ladies enough to "go round;" it was a small family party. He was the brother of my hostess, a fine, intelligent fellow about twenty-five years old, who had just taken his bachelor's degree at Oxford. As I turned from his sister to him, in a pause of conversation, he asked me with great earnestness, almost with solemnity, "Is it—true—that—in—America—the women—sit—on—juries?"
I answered instantly, and with perfect gravity "Yes, all of them who are not on duty as sergeants of dragons." For one appreciable delightful moment, doubt and bewilderment flashed through his bright, handsome eyes, and then he, as well as others within ear-shot, appreciated the situation, and there was a hearty laugh and an enormous black

A Boy Who Went to Sea.

THE DEPARTURE OF A LAD WHO HAD THE NAME HARKAWAY STUDIES.

Among the crew of the Nova Scotia
schooner Bertha Ellen that recently arrived in this port was a boy named Richard Fielding, whose experience as a runaway is worth recording as a lesson to adventurous young fellows whose greatest ambition is to plow the raging main
in a "low, rakish, swift-sailing clipper." Young Fielding is about fifteen years of age, with a bright handsome face, pleasing manner, and of evident intelligence.
His father is a wealthy land-owner in Hampshire, an English gentleman of family and position. Richard had been sent to school in Dorset, where Bracebridge Hemming's wonderful lies about the happy issues of all Jack Harkaway's adventures fell into his hands, and were eagerly perused. The natural result followed. He longed to emulate the romantic glory of Jack's impossible actions,
and yearned for a field to display, as Jack had done, the heroism and pluck
which he supposed that he possessed.
Unfortunately, his father had no influence with the Board of Admiralty, or the boy might have gone into the navy and found a legitimate channel in which to develop his adventurous longings. As it was, Richard determined to run away and go to sea. Tying up the customary bundle the little fellow slipped away from school and went to Liverpool. Here he found it impossible to ship in any capacity, but, determined to go to sea at all hazards, he stole away in the hold of a Mediterranean fruit brig bound to Messina. He was soon discovered, and after undergoing no end of abuse from the captain, was set to the dirtiest kind of work, swabbing the deck, scraping the masts and tarring down the rigging, and on every calm was put over the side to scrub copper. Before arriving at Messina he was one day tarring down the jibstay, swung in a boatswain's chair,
when the man who was attending to the hoisting rope carelessly lost his hold, and Dick was precipitated to the deck, falling on the anchor stock and on the rail.
His arm and leg were broken, and he bounced into the water. He was rescued
however, and, after being treely cursed by the captain for the detention of the vessel which the accident had caused, he was passed below, where, without any medical treatment, he was permitted to stay till the vessel arrived at port, fortunately only twenty-four hours afterward.
He then went to the hospital where incompetent physicians dressed his limbs,
and after three months was discharged,
penniless and without friends, and a crim-
ple. All the British Consul could do was to get him a berth, which, owing to the fact of the boy's crippled limb, was a difficult thing to do, but which was finally accomplished, and Richard sailed as a cabin boy in an American bark for Rio.
His situation in this vessel was more tolerable than on coming at Dick's

They were not long in finding a basket, accompanied with a letter, earnestly urging that it should be immediately sent, without opening, to Madame de Brinvilliers, giving her address. The letter, dated Paris, May 25, 1672, has this strange wording:

"I entreat that any one into whose hands this casket may fall will have the kindness to deliver it in person to the Marchioness de Brinvilliers, residence in the Rue Neuve de St. Paul, and to her alone. Everything it contains belongs exclusively to her, and concerns her only; moreover, nothing in it can be of the least use to anybody but her. If she should die before me, it is my most earnest wish that the casket and its contents shall be promptly burned without opening. I solemnly swear, by the God I adore, that I assert nothing but the truth. If my request and prayer be not strictly complied with, I charge the conscience of the non-complier with the responsibility both here and hereafter, that I may fully acquit my own."

This appeal excited curiosity and suspicion, instead of insuring obedience to the appeal. The casket was officially sealed; but, having been duly opened, was found to contain some instruments in writing, with a number of vials and powders carefully wrapped in paper. Among the writings was a promissory note for thirty thousand livres, which Sainte-Croix had exacted of his mistress as a recompense of his crimes; certain inferential implications of the Marchioness in the recent murders, and many of her passionate love-letters to her dead gallant. The contents of the vials and papers on analysis proved to be subtle poisons. Some of the papers were labeled, and the labels mentioned the exact effect which the different poisons ought to produce. As soon as the Marchioness had heard of her accomplice's death, she tried to get possession of the casket (this was before it had been opened); but when it was refused, she took alarm, and fled at once to England. She was none too quick; the police were already on her track, and only a few hours behind her. Having been apprised of this, she laughed, saying that one woman could outwit a dozen men, and that she had seen born to good luck.

His confession and trial created great excitement in Paris, and a vast concourse of people witnessed the execution. The flight of the marchioness corroborated all the other testimony against her, and she was also sentenced by default (par contumace) to be beheaded. This troubled her very little, however, as she was living under an assumed name in London, and, as she remarked, a long sea would be needed to reach from the capital of France to the capital of England.

Until the death of Sainte-Croix and the execution of Lachaussee, their peculiar poisoning had been an occult art in France; but so much was then published of their dreadful secrets and mode of operation, that inheritance-powder was widely made and sold, and persons were filled with it all over the kingdom.

The shirt was inspected thoroughly, and the button found neatly and deftly sewed on just beneath the tag of the shirt bosom so as to button to that appendage in a most elegant manner.

'Well, by Jove,' exclaimed Charley, 'If I didn't know any more about sewing on a button than that I wouldn't get married, I'd learn how.'

'You were going to say you wouldn't have got married,' cried his wife, putting on her hat hastily and bursting into tears.

'Where are you going?' demanded Charley savagely.

'I'm going home, and I'll get a separation from you and your shirts; that's where I'm goin', blubbered Emma. 'I thought you wanted the button there to fasten your what-you-call-ems.'

Englishwomen and Politics

Richard Grant White, in the Galaxy, thus discusses the comparative interest taken in politics by English and American women:—

It is generally believed in England, I cannot tell why, that women in 'America' take part in public affairs and are much more in the eye of the world than English women are. Of this belief I met with an amusing instance. One day at dinner in a 'great house' I had on one side of me a gentleman who had come in alone for lack of ladies enough to 'go round'; it was a small family party. He was the brother of my hostess, a fine, intelligent fellow about twenty-five years old, who had just taken his bachelor's degree at Oxford. I answered instantly, and with perfect gravity, 'Yes, all of them who are not on duty as sergeants of dragoons.' For one appreciable delightful moment, doubt and bewilderment flashed through his bright, handsome eyes, and then he, as well as others within ear-shot, appreciated the situation, and there was a hearty laugh and an ingenuous blush mantled his cheeks—for young men can blush in England. When I explained that in no part of that strange country 'America' with which I was acquainted did women sit on juries, or take any part in public affairs, or even vote or go to public meetings, and that nine in ten of the women that I knew would be puzzled to tell who represented in Congress the districts in which they lived, who were the Senators from their States, and possibly who were their Governors, I was listened to with profound attention; and the surprise of my hearers was very manifest, and was strongly expressed. It could hardly have been otherwise; for nothing that I could have said would have brought into clearer light the fact that women in America are very much less informed upon public affairs and take very much less interest in them than is the case with almost all Englishwomen of the cultivated classes. In England almost all intelligent women of the upper and upper-middle classes take a very lively interest in politics, are tolerably well informed upon the public questions of the day, and in many cases they have no inconsiderable influence upon them. The reason of this is that political life and the social life of the upper classes there are so thoroughly intermingled. Politics form the chief concern of the members of those classes; apart, of course from their own private affairs. Hardly a woman of that class is without a husband, brother, kinsman, or friend who is, or has been, or hopes to be a member of Parliament, or who is in diplomacy, or connected in some way with colonial affairs. Politics there are intimately connected with the great object of woman's life in modern days—social success. bundle the little fellow slipped away from school and went to Liverpool. Here he found it impossible to ship in any capacity, but, determined to go to sea at all hazards, he stole away in the hold of a Mediterranean fruit brig bound to Messina. He was soon discovered, and after undergoing no end of abuse from the captain, was set to the dirtiest kind of work, swabbing the deck, scraping the masts and tarring down the rigging, and on every calm was put over the side to scrub copper. Before arriving at Messina he was one day tarring down the jib stay, swung in a boatswain's chair, when the man who was attending to the hoisting rope carelessly lost his hold, and Dick was precipitated to the deck, falling on the anchor stock and on the rail. His arm and leg were broken, and he bounded into the water. He was rescued however, and, after being freely cursed by the captain for the detention of the vessel which the accident had caused, he was passed below, where, without any medical treatment, he was permitted to stay till the vessel arrived at port, fortunately only twenty-four hours afterward. He then went to the hospital where incompetent physicians dressed his limbs, and after three months was discharged, penniless and without friends, and a cripple. All the British Consul could do was to get him a berth, which, owing to the fact of the boy's crippled limb, was a difficult thing to do, but which was finally accomplished, and Richard sailed as a cabin boy in an American bark for Rio. His situation in this vessel was more tolerable, but on arriving at Rio the bark was condemned as unseaworthy, and Richard was a second time cast adrift in a foreign land. He finally shipped as cook in a West India trading schooner, where he got more kicks than hapence, and in this vessel came to Halifax, where he shipped in a schooner that afterwards came to Baltimore with potatoes. Previous to sailing he wrote to his mother, telling her the name of his vessel. His father cabled to Halifax and ascertained his destination, and then cabled to a friend in Baltimore to look for Richard on his arrival. Dick came here in the schooner Bertha Ellen, after a thirty days tempestuous voyage. His father's agent met him, telegraphed his father, provided him with a new outfit of clothes and a passage to Liverpool by the White Star line steamer sailing to-day. And last evening Richard left for New York to take the steamer, a wiser boy, a cripple for life, and one not likely to again be filled with glowing enthusiasm at the stories of writers of melodramatic fiction. The gentleman who acted for young Dick here can be found daily not a thousand miles from the Merchants' Exchange, and will vouch for the truth of this story.—Baltimore American.

His "Boy Baby."

There are "Reformed Church" clergymen holding a national Synod in our city and on Wednesday they were taking up collection for Foreign Missions, when one of their number suddenly sprang to his feet, with joy on his face, and a greenback waving in one hand—a telegram in the other. "Brethren!" he cried, "I have received a telegram that God has given my wife a boy baby, and in honor of the event I subscribe $10 to the foreign mission cause." Evidently "the boy baby" was not a usual manifestation of grace to this goodly minister; he made such a halloo about it. He ought to go to Ireland and see how coolly the farmers there take the arrival of boy babies in ones and twos, from year to year. Our Reformed clerical friend must reform his propensity to excitement; for in case boy babies should come to him at the time of every annual Synod, where on earth would he contain himself at this rate of palpitating proclamation and a ten-dollar greenback for every bouncing boy that "God gives his wife." Probably however, this boy is the minister's first; as he gets used to his luck, he will not, we hope, find it necessary to run into an ecclesiastical synod to make boast of his achievement. It might confuse the gospel homilies, trench on the foreign mission debates, and tantalize some of the mod-near or her accomplice's death, she had to get possession of the casket (this before it had been opened); but when it was refused, she took alarm, and at once to England. She was none quick; the police were already on track, and only a few hours behind.

Having been apprised of this, she had, saying that one woman could rid a dozen men, and that she had a horn to good luck. Notwithstanding the many circumstances pointing to her guilt, there had been, at this time, no absolute proof. But fortune would have it, Lachaussee, the man who had been employed to make up with her two brothers, protested against the seals placed upon Saintex's effects, claiming that the deceased had left him a considerable sum for service rendered. The wretch felt so secure he believed himself in no danger of this audacious demand. But the attention of Madame de Villareaux, one of the poisoned Aubray heirs, having been thus drawn to her, she had long suspected as conniving in her husband's death, she caused Lachaussee's arrest on that charge. The next he was confronted with justice. He was terribly frightened, and lost all control. He made full confession of having murdered the brothers, that he had been hired to do the deed by Saintex and Madame de Villareaux, and wished many convincing details. He was condemned to be executed, and his head (March, 1873) on the Place de la Bastille (now the Place de l'Hôtel-de-ville). His confession and trial created excitement in Paris, and a vast concourse of people witnessed the execution. The flight of the marchioness corroborated all the other testimony against her, she was also sentenced by default (contumace) to be beheaded. This she fled her very life, however, as she was living under an assumed name in London, and, as she remarked, a long would be needed to reach from the capital of France to the capital of England.

Until the death of Sainte-Croix and the execution of Lachaussee, their peculiar poisoning had been an occult art in France; but so much was then published of their dreadful secrets and mode of operation, that inhale-powder was easily made and sold, and persons were dreading it all over the kingdom. It had done much more harm than good; for, where they and their escaped accomplices had caused the death of one man, the knowledge of the means they resorted to probably caused the death of hundreds.

Utilising Refuse.

Leicester, England, is said to have the best managed system of cleansing the city in the world. It is under the charge of a health board, and the theory upon which it is based is that the offal must be for its own removal. Everything that goes to make dirt and breed disease in tenement-house garbage to papers and broken bottles is collected in wagons and taken to the public yards on outskirts of the town. Each load, being dropped, is carefully assorted, everything which can be worked into useful commodities is treated in ways in shops owned by the board, furnaces being run without expense equal as the cinders collected supply necessary fuel. The products of the heaps include a valuable patent manure, paper-pulp, a disinfecting powder, a kind of mortar which proves to be of great use to builders of brick-work, and for the mechanical arts, filling for beds, and scrap metals of every sort. The odd bits that can be turned to good account are passed through a "carbonizer" and reduced to harmlessness; and the whole process, or combination of processes, here described, is conducted without creating any offensive smells or smoke worth mentioning.

Where are you going?" demanded Charley savagely.

"I'm going home, and I'll get a separation from you and your shirts; that's where I'm going," blubbered Emma. "I thought you wanted the button there to fasten your what-you-call-em."

It took Charley an hour to persuade Emma that if she went home there wouldn't be strawberries and cream enough to go around, and that she could get all she wanted at Delmonico's, and he'd pay for it. —Reading Eagle.

The American Game Chicken

A practical joke was played nearly thirty years ago at a cocking main in Havana, by some sailors belonging to an American man-of-war. The sailors had been betting and losing, day after day, at the cock pit, which was the amusement they most affected, until they were all left without a cent. In that plight the sailors were when the man-of-war was ordered off to San Francisco. A number of months afterwards the vessel returned to Havana, and the Jack Tars had fully matured a scheme for vengeance. Drawing all their pay, and borrowing all the money they could in addition, at the first leave they started for the cock pit, carrying with them their gold and a bag, about which they preserved a good deal of mystery. Some of the ship's officers, surmising that something was in the wind, followed, but not to them even was the secret divulged. Scarcely had they reached the pit when an excited Spaniard sprang into the little arena, where a battle had just ended. Under his left arm he carried a magnificent game-cock, in his right hand he flourished a bag of doubloons, and he yelled forth a challenge on behalf of his bird against "anything that were feathers."

No other challenge could have been half so welcome to the sailors; for during their former unhappy experience he had been their botan, raking in their gold pieces almost as fast as they could bet them. His verbose and grandiloquent defiance was promptly accepted, the money was staked, and the Americans shook their champion out of their mysterious bag. A nondescript creature it was, with a great solid body, roughly covered with chicken feathers and tar, its wings and tail clipped, its head broad and adorned with a keen covered beak, with long sharp talons at the end of its toes, instead of gaffs upon its legs. Despite its strange hair-disguise, the officers recognized it at once as an American eagle. But the Spaniards knew nothing about it, and the one who had made the match was furious deeming himself insulted by pitting such a miserable-looking creature, against his splendid fowl. The alcide ordered, however, that the fight should take place, according to the terms of the challenge, and the Senor tossed his bird into the pit. It was ready to fight of course for a game cock of good blood would not hesitate to attack a bird as big as the fabled rook. So the first notice the "American game chicken," as the sailors had christened their bird, received of the presence of an enemy was a fierce attack. He calmly looked down upon the game cock strutting threateningly before him. The sailors were not without anxiety unless the keen gaffs might settle their eagle before he got warmed up to his work, but the fear was quickly dispelled. The game cock dashed forward again. In less than a second the Spaniards witnessed an astounding sight. The "American chicken" placidly stretched out one great claw, seized his antagonist by the head, drew him up, and, applying his other claw, to the body, tore his head off with a single pull. Then he proceeded to eat him. A storm of imprecations and shouts of astonishment rent the air, but the sailors were too well armed and too numerous for the Spaniards, and so they got their money and returned aboard ship, laden with more gold than they ever before had, and carrying their champion in triumph. —[New York Sun.

nine in ten of the women that I knew would be puzzled to tell who represented in Congress the districts in which they lived, who were the Senators from their States, and possibly who were their Governors, I was listened to with profound attention; and the surprise of my hearers was very manifest, and was strongly expressed. It could hardly have been otherwise; for nothing that I could have said would have brought into clearer light the fact that women in America are very much less informed upon public affairs and take very much less interest in them than is the case with almost all Englishwomen of the cultivated classes. In England almost all intelligent women of the upper and upper middle classes take a very lively interest in politics, are tolerably well informed upon the public questions of the day, and in many cases they have an inconsiderable influence upon them. The reason of this is that political life and the social life of the upper classes there are so thoroughly intermingled. Politics form the chief concern of the members of those classes; apart, of course from their own private affairs. Hardly a woman of that class is without a husband, brother, kinsman, or friend who is, or has been, or hopes to be a member of Parliament, or who is in diplomacy, or connected in some way with colonial affairs. Politics there are intimately connected with the great object of woman's life in modern days—social success. It is difficult for women in England, and even for men, to understand the entire severance of politics and society which obtains in America, and to believe that a man may be a member of Congress or even a Senator, and yet be entirely without social position. Sacred Plantation Melodies

The good old doctrine of the perseverance of the saints has been set to music by a colored genius. It is a sample of the church melodies sung by the colored race throughout the state of Virginia, and amidst the plantations of the Southern States. The meter may be a little irregular, but the "pith out" is certainly orthodox:—

Methodist! Methodist! was I born,
Methodist! 'twine to die;
I've sworn to run in de Methodist faith,
An' eat o' de Methodist pie!
Trials!
Great tribulations!
Aint dat hard?
Trials!
Climbin' up Zion's hill!
But 'tain't no matter how long it takes,
I'm goin' for to climb der hill!
CHORUS.
For I's goin' to climb der hill, der hill, &c.

The Great Sinner

Mrs. Editor.—I suppose sinners are degraded. This might be inferred from Saul's statement of himself being the chief of sinners.

The Boston American Bulletin speaking of the Moody and Sankey revival, says:—"They had a tough subject in the inquiry room this week. Moody wrestled with him and Sankey sang with him, but the man seemed to despair of forgiveness. Finally, Moody asked him what heavy sin burdened his mind, and he confessed to having bilked a newspaper publisher out of three years' subscription. The evangelist said that they did not profess to perform miracles, but if he would settle up his dues with compound interest, and pay for three more in advance, although they could not open the doors of the church to him, perhaps he might be sneaked under the canvass." Good for him. —GLEANER.

Mother vs. Wife.

A novel scene occurred as the western train was leaving the Montreal depot the other day. It appears that a marriage took place four years ago between a young man from a western city and a handsome young lady residing here. The couple resided peaceably here for some time with the young lady's mother, until the mother of the young man arrived in town and persuaded him to go home again. The wife and mother-in-law hearing of his contemplated departure, hastened to the Bonaventure depot just a few minutes before the departure of the train. A scene then occurred. The young man was firmly held by his mother, and, notwithstanding all the efforts of his wife, he was unable to move. The conductor put an end to the scandal by entering the car and ordering those without tickets to leave the train. The young wife was carried from the car fainting, and the train proceeded with her unfaithful husband and his triumphant mother. —Witness.

political dishonesty, the ominous trial of the Pacific Scandal that follows in his path withersoever he goes, weighs him hopelessly down. The Secret Service ghost stands in the way to the treasury benches, and in the name of honesty warns him away and there is no other to take his place. The whole Tory party in the house of commons could not furnish a cabinet that would secure the confidence of the country for twenty-four hours. The only course left open to the conservatives is to accept the position which the misdeeds of the present leader and his associates have reduced them to. While the interests of the country are safe in the hands of such men as MACKENZIE and BLAKE, CARTWRIGHT and HUNTINGDON and their colleagues, there is little cause to fear that the old regime of corruption and dishonest government, gone by we hope, forever, will be inaugurated.

THE WAR NEWS.

BRITISH IRON-CLADS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN

In the House of Commons the Chancellor of the Exchequer said the object of sending the Mediterranean fleet to Besika Bay was that it is, and would be, a convenient station. The position was central, enabling the commander to communicate easily with the ambassador at Constantinople and the Home Government. As to the reason why the fleet was not sent to the Suez Canal, the Chancellor said it was because it was no convenient central position, and besides there was no reason why more than one ship should be stationed at the Suez Canal. The fleet numbers seven iron clads and one frigate.

The arrival of the British fleet in Besika Bay is regarded in Constantinople with great dissatisfaction by influential Turks, who consider it simply as a sign that England is preparing to seize her share of the plunder.

Naval Engagement in Peruvian Waters.

ATTACK BY THE "SHAH" AND "AMETHYST" ON THE REBEL PERUVIAN RAM.

PANAMA, July 7.—The details of the battle between the Shah and Amethyst of the British navy, and the rebel Peruvian ram Huascar, are received. It occurred on 29th May. The English opened fire at about 600 yards, the first shot carrying away the flag of the Huascar, which was immediately replaced. The Huascar, replied with the heavy 300-pound Blakelys in the turret, and the Amethyst, laying off and on, steadily persisted in attempts to rake the ram. The Shah fired eight broadsides, which were discharged by electricity, and in a few moments everything on the Huascar's decks, except the masts, turret, and smoke stack, disappeared. The Huascar continued to fire at regular intervals. A shell from the Amethyst entered one of forward ports, exploding inside, killing one and wounding several. After the light had lasted about an hour, the Amethyst was seen with thick smoke issuing from amidships, and steamed out of the action, not returning for twenty minutes, leaving the Huascar and Shah alone. The former attempted to ram her advantage, but the splendid handling of the Shah prevented any successful manoeuvre of this nature. One 300-pound shot struck the turret of the Huascar, penetrated the iron two inches, then rebounded on the side. She was hit twice by the same class of shot and with precisely the same result. The Peruvians now adopted a new mode of attack—first advancing on the Shah and then on the Amethyst, but the superior speed and superior management of these vessels prevented her ramming them. The battle lasted three hours; then the Huascar slowly retired, a shell from the Amethyst having destroyed all the primers for the turret guns, and she headed toward the land, for which she had been manoeuvring for some time. The enemy did not attempt to pursue, and contented themselves with receiving the last shots from the Huascar and remaining about two miles from the shore, keeping watch. The Huascar, although attacked at this time by musketry firing from Government troops, who imagined that a landing was to be attempted, sent a white flag to the captain of the port begging ammunition and asking permission to land a few wounded. Only one man was killed. This was refused, and an answer returned calling for the surrender of the ship. The Huascar being short of ammunition, and apprehending a repetition of the English attack, took advantage of a heavy fog, and slipped quietly down to Iquique, where the Government fleet was lying, and where Pierola hoped to make an arrangement for a combined action against the British forces. The movement was cautiously executed, and none too soon, for at about ten o'clock a steam launch from the Shah came stealing through the darkness with a torpedo, and by mere chance avoided fixing it to the side of a coasting steamer, mistaking her for the Huascar. When the departure of the ram was made known the English vessels disappeared.

The President of Peru has issued a proclamation, in which he declares that he will exact from Great Britain explanations and satisfaction consequent on such a wanton outrage on a friendly power.

The officers of the Shah give, in substance, the following account of events after the battle:—

After the engagement and the surrender of the Huascar to the Government, the Shah and Amethyst visited Iquique, and held some intercourse with the Peruvian fleet which still remained at that port. The reason stated for not capturing the Huascar is that the Shah and Amethyst could not follow her into the shoal water near the shore. Neither

The Zouave Trouble.

THE CAPTAIN'S VERSION.

We have been requested by Simmonds to publish the following explanation of the unfortunate affair took place on board his steamer on Union Day.

Editor of the Star:

Sir,—On leaving Queen's Ottawa, Monday evening last, number of Papal Zouaves, I had sign hoisted aft and the Union Jack in commemoration of Dominion Day, when the Zouaves thought have my Jack hauled down and the flag hoisted in its place without giving the courtesy to ask my consent would have readily been given. consider the greatest insult I have received. Seeing one of my men Jack under his arm I ordered him to hoist it, which he blankly refused and was backed in his refusal pilot, both of whom I have had in accordance with the Seamen's Union Act 1878, for breach of discipline. Seeing the state of affairs, I took from him and hoisted it myself, to prevent the Papal flag from blowing board, put my foot on it whilst I the Jack. The moment my flag the masthead some thirty or forty Zouaves seized me by the throats most unarrantable and brutal directly under that flag from which I claim protection, and which as I have breath in me I will never all be insulted; not content with this threatened to pitch me overboard believe would have carried their into execution had not Mr. Collin bell, of the Civil Service, a priest French gentleman (whom I beg to sincerely) come to my rescue, while one of my contemptible cowardly stirred to lend me a helping hand cannot speak too highly of the conduct those gentlemen who assisted me enabled me to get to my cabin was advised by a friendly priest to return but I am not in the habit of showing white feather, and will always end to do my duty and be at my post what may. I am falsely accused of deliberately thrown the Zouave overboard. I deny most emphatically having done so, as I had intended to give it to them had they not premeditated by their interference, by which themselves lost their flag, for the moment they hauled me away, the flag free blew over the side, a circumstance I sincerely regret. Another assertion make, which is equally false, is that action on my part was premeditated as sure nothing was farther from my thoughts. I have no animosity any man, class, or religious sect; I believe every one has a right to worship according to the dictates of his conscience therefore it was no hatred or ill-will prompted me to act as I did. I felt occurred was a gross insult, and on what in my opinion I was perfectly justified in doing, and what I think any British subject who had any spall loyalty in him would have done. acted wrongly I am sorry for it, but I only did my duty, and am sure that flag which was so unwarrantably used will always protect me and all Her Majesty's loyal subjects.

Yours very respectfully,
T. SIMMONS

THE OPPOSITION LEADERSHIP.

The Ontario debut, so to speak of the coming leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the house of Commons has not, it must candidly be admitted been marked with the most brilliant success. The enthusiasm he has awakened in the breasts of the faithful, has not been of a character to spoil Dr. TUPPER with vanity. At the few bun-fests where he has played a very squeaky second fiddle to Sir JOHN, he has been simply tolerated by men who are ready to swallow the great conservative chieftain, bodily with his most reckless statements. Of course Sir JOHN, keeps his followers in good humor with a running fire of jokes, recklessly voted wit, and that not of the newest. Dr. TUPPER, has been reckless and rash enough in his statements to please the most gullible of Tories. In his mildest moments of misrepresentation and skillful distortion of fact, although the chieftain has approvingly patted him on the back, yet he did not take. Plainly enough his day for taking the leadership has not yet come. His speech lacks the rollicking buffoonery that marks the oratory of JOHN A., who however stale his jokes, and far-fetched his witticisms, always throws the faithful into convulsions of laughter. Dr. TUPPER, after airing his incompetency a few times in Ontario, failed to draw so lamentably that he has now retired to his native province to mourn over his lost chance for the leadership of the opposition and with it the chance of becoming premier of the Dominion, when the full fruition of the great reaction shall descend upon the Tory Party, and the corrupt Grits shall be driven from power. Not only the Doctor's incompetency, but his overt acts of folly have driven him to the retirement of his own province. His reckless misstatements from him, fiction, non-fact, and demagogues accounts from the Turkish side show the Turk's arrangements at Rustchuk in this respect are shockingly mismanaged.

The Turks abandoning Montenegro is confirmed. Of 15,000 Bashli Bazonks who entered Montenegro with the Turkish army 11,000 are dead of missing.

The Sultan recently at a private audience declared to the British representative that he would not guarantee protection to Christians if the Russians continue to excite a rebellion in Bulgaria, and perpetrate a atrocities in Asia Minor.

The Turks in Bosnia are committing shocking atrocities, murdering inefficient villagers in several places, and carrying off their heads as trophies. The correspondent declares he has seen bodies of persons so maltreated.

Two Turkish frigates have been bombed and burned Chenkettil. The landed a force which defeated the garrison and compelled them to abandon the town.

The lawlessness of the irregulars causes almost a panic in Pera. The Italian Vice-Consul has been forcibly robbed of a horse and severely injured by Circassians. Two attempts have been made to force an entrance to the English club. Some irregulars, who were seen, have been sent to the seat of war upon the representations of Mr. Layard.

Fifteen hundred persons fleeing from Adler to the Turkish lines, from fear of the Russians, perished from hunger.

July 10.—Constantinople is under a reign of terror. Crowds of lawless soldiery and bands of Circassians and Zebeks rob and murder with impunity. The streets are given up to these outlays after nightfall, and all the cafes and public resorts close at sundown. A massacre of the Christians and foreigners in Constantinople is liable momentarily.

RUSSIA.

Two Russian gunboats have left to endeavour to blow up a Turkish monitor which has gone ashore at Sulung, at the mouth of the Danube. All the Turkish monitors on the Danube will fall into the hands of the Russians unless destroyed.

Since 16th June (the Russians have been defeated five times. It is believed they lost 10,000 men one June 30th. Their wounded fill 800 waggons.

It is officially announced that the Russian losses in crossing the Danube at Sistova were 800 killed and 400 wounded.

A special from Shumla, says the corpses of several Russians gives evidence that the Turks are using explosive bullets.

German financiers are alarmed at the large Russian issues of paper currency, since the outbreak of the war 160,000,000 roubles have been remitted.

The 120,000 Russians who have crossed the Danube at Sistova comprise 20,000 cavalry, and 250 cannon, 80,000 more Russians are concentrated between Simlitz and Timu-Magurela. The army which crossed at Sistova has been divided into three bodies, the principal of which is marching on Rustchuk, and the other two towards the Balkans and Nikoloff respectively. General Ignatieff has arrived at the headquarters of the Grand Duke Nicholas at Sistova.

The Russians intend to issue a general order stating that they are warring only against an organized force, and any marauding parties not coming within that designation in a military sense will be dealt with according to martial law.

An express train in Russia, carrying 600,000 of roubles, not only failed the other day to reach its destination, but has altogether disappeared, without leaving the slightest traces affording a clue as to what has become of it.

POSITION ON THE DANUBE.

The fighting thus far reported cannot have amounted to more than outpost affairs, for the Russians are not yet prepared for serious work. The Turkish quadrilateral remains intact, and not less threatening to the 120,000 Russians said to be across the Danube at Sistova, than if Gen. Zimmerman had not crossed the Danub and swept the Dobradscia. III.

Only one man was killed. This was refused, and an answer returned calling for the surrender of the ship. The Huascar being short of ammunition, and apprehending a repetition of the English attack, took advantage of a heavy fog, and slipped quietly down to Iquique, where the Government fleet was lying, and where Pierola hoped to make an arrangement for a combined action against the British forces. The movement was cautiously executed, and none too soon, for at about ten o'clock a steam launch from the Shah came stealing through the darkness with a torpedo, and by mere chance avoided fixing it to the side of a coasting steamer, mistaking her for the Huascar. When the departure of the ram was made known the English vessels disappeared.

The President of Peru has issued a proclamation, in which he declares that he will exact from Great Britain explanations and satisfaction consequent on such a wanton outrage on a friendly power.

The officers of the Shah give, in substance, the following account of events after the battle:—

After the engagement and the surrender of the Huascar to the Government, the Shah and Amethyst visited Iquique, and held some intercourse with the Peruvian fleet which still remained at that port. The reason stated for not capturing the Huascar is that the Shah and Amethyst could not follow her into the shoal water near the shore. Neither of the English ships were injured during the combat. The Huascar was hit no less than seventy times during the engagement. The handling and fighting of the rebel ram was admirable. The Shah would have entered Callao Bay on her way north, but was met by a steamer with the British Consul on board outside the harbour, and advised to keep on her voyage, and thereby avoid any further collision with the Peruvians, who, he said, were prepared to give her a hot reception in case she entered into any of their ports.

Breach of Promise Action Against a Lady.

At Dublin a singular breach of promise case was tried in the Common Pleas, before Chief Justice Morris and a special jury. The usual position of the parties was reversed, the gentleman being the plaintiff and the lady the defendant. Plaintiff, a butcher named Knowles, made the acquaintance of Mrs. Caroline Elizabeth Verschoyle (now Mulligan), the defendant, in October last on board a steambot during the voyage from Liverpool to Dublin. She was the widow of Captain Verschoyle, mistress of a fine residence—Roebuck Hall—in the county Dublin, and mother of three children. Knowles was a widower, with one child. The acquaintance so rapidly ripened that in a short time she consented to become his bride. Being of different religions there was some difficulty about their marriage in Dublin, and they went to Liverpool, where they found it necessary to stop fourteen days before they could get married by the registrar, the expenses of the journey, which he swore amounted to £150, being paid by the plaintiff. In the meantime the lady's friends influenced her to break off the match, and she returned to Dublin without the plaintiff. She afterwards married a dealer in periodicals, named Andrew Mulligan, who is now master of Roebuck Hall, and a co-defendant in the suit. The examination of the plaintiff caused great merriment. After twenty minutes' deliberation the jury gave him $200 damages.

The "Queen" of the Asylum.

FROM A VISIT TO THE ROCKWOOD LUNATIC ASYLUM BY THE "GLOBE" CORRESPONDENT.

Of the 159 female inmates one stands above all the rest, and is treated with the greatest respect. She is known as The Queen, or, as she herself gives her title, Queen Victoria, Owner of this Dominion, and Empress of India. She has crowns, themselves lost their nag, for the moment they hauled me away, the flag blew over the side, a circumstantially sincerely regret. Another assertion I make, which is equally false, is that action on my part was premeditated. I am sure nothing was farther from my thoughts. I have no animosity against any man, class, or religious sect; I believe every one has a right to worship according to the dictates of his conscience, therefore it was no hatred or ill-feeling prompted me to act as I did. I felt what was a gross insult, and only what in my opinion I was perfectly justified in doing, and what I think any of British subject who had any spark of loyalty in him would have done. I acted wrongly I am sorry for it, but I only did my duty, and am sure that flag which was so unwarrantably insulted will always protect me and all Her Majesty's loyal subjects.

Montreal, July 6.—A meeting of Directors of the Ottawa River Navigation Co., was held to-day to consider the trouble arising out of the emente board the steamer Victoria. The result has been the approval of the captain's conduct in every particular except that he should have remonstrated with Zouaves before pulling down their flag. He retains his position.

The above case was tried before Police Magistrates in Ottawa on the Myrand, the insubordinate deck-hand been sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment for disobeying orders. Cousin the other prisoner, was discharged.

Shocking Murder.

A WOMAN KILLS HER TWO CHILDREN ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

A most shocking murder occurred at Canfield Station on Sunday morning, the details of which are horrible in extreme, and lead one almost to wonder if this is a Christian land in which live. The person who committed the most inhuman act is a woman, apparently of about 35 years of age, and from appearances she does not look like one who would be guilty of such a fearful deed and we cannot help but think she labouring under temporary insanity the time, although at present she is perfectly rational, and aware of the consequences, of the act. It appears that some time she has lived with her husband on very bad terms, and from her account she has been ill-treated. From sons she had contracted, and from the interference of other parties, she became jealous of her husband, and imagined kept company of bad women, and this reason, and because she says she was ill-treated, she assigns the cause of the murder of her children. There is doubt she is of a very excitable nature and that her feelings had been worked to a dreadful pitch, making her almost crazy from jealous excitement. The prisoner's name is Mary Jane Pevey or Christopher Pevey, employed section-boss on the Canada South Railroad at Canfield Station. It appears that Pevey went away and said that was never coming back. The prisoner had got it in her head that he had got off with another woman, and imagined that the people of the place were doing her. On Sunday morning she set fire to her house, and took her two children, the eldest, struck them on the head with a stone, threw them into the cistern, which was nearly full of water, and jumped in herself, intending to commit suicide. The fire, attracted some people and the prisoner was found clinging to the top of the cistern with her hands, her feet caught on the opposite side, the children were both dead. Their heads were badly bruised, but they had evidently been thrown in the water while yet alive.

A coroner's inquest was held on the remains of the children, and the jury returned a verdict that they had come to their death at the hands of their mother while labouring under a fit of temporary insanity. The prisoner was lodged in Simcoe gaol on Monday last.

The Ontario debut, so to speak of the coming leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the house of Commons has not, it must candidly be admitted been marked with the most brilliant success. The enthusiasm he has awakened in the breasts of the faithful, has not been of a character to spoil Dr. TUPPER with vanity. Not only the Doctor's incompetency, but his overt acts of folly have driven him to the retirement of his own province. His reckless misstatements and his palpable political falsehoods were all very well before a friendly and prejudiced auditory, but when they come before the Reform Press of the country, and had to submit to the dissection of investigation, their nakedness was exposed, and when the Premier and Mr. CARTWRIGHT and Mr. HUNTINGTON and Mr. MILLS, came also into the picnic field and rent with the invasive logic of facts his mendacious sophistries in shreds, he was doubly anxious to leave his leadership unwon and depart whither he might have peace. No, Dr. TUPPER is not the man for Galway yet, and it is plain that when Sir JOHN leaves the field there is not a man to take charge of the shepherdless fold of the Tory party. Who shall it be? Dr. TUPPER is distanced. Shall it be Wandering WILLIE, or MACKENZIE BOWELL, or the Niagara incarnation of namby-pambyism, PLUMB? There is not the slightest danger of the threatened re-action producing a change of government. Granting, merely for the sake of illustration however, that the MACKENZIE administration are unfit to govern the country, whom shall we find to take their places? The people will not stand again a one-man power, with a one-horse following. JOHN A. may be competent as far as ability goes—or was at one time—to fill the position of Premier, but his intrinsic

In the same way provision must be made against the Turkish forces about Nikopolis and Widdin before any serious advance upon the Balkans can be undertaken.

A Horrible Crime.

We have just heard a startling piece of news from Washington County. It seems that a young man, whose name we could not learn, married, some time back, a Miss Bawls, whose family had at one time lived on the lands of Mr. A. S. Hayes. The girl had been seduced, and before marriage, had given birth to a deformed and idiot child. Her husband appears to have been dissatisfied about the child, and had influenced his wife to agree to a mode of getting rid of it. With this view a box was obtained, and the child, while still alive, nailed up in it. But, while this is going on, a neighbor woman happened in, and, hearing a strange noise in the box, inquired and found out what was done. She persuaded them to open the box and take the little thing out. The news, however, of this matter got out, and a few nights thereafter a mob visited the house, and the next morning the husband and wife were seen hanging to a tree in the neighborhood. This event occurred about ten days ago.—Lebanon Kentuckian.

Of the 150 female inmates one stands above all the rest, and is treated with the greatest respect. She is known as The Queen, or, as she herself gives her title, Queen Victoria, Owner of this Dominion, and Empress of India. She has crowns, medals, ribbons, necklaces innumerable, and when Her Majesty was introduced to the writer as the Duke of Buccleugh she could not have had on less than thirty pounds of brass and glass in the shape of buttons and buckles, and taking this off she displayed another one not the less hidden by ornaments. How many more brazen layers were below the last I cannot say. She wore one very large necklace given her by the Lord Mayor. When asked if she wore the Order of the Garter she replied of course she did, but she did not care to show it because the matron was looking. She had evidently misconstrued the question. When it is said she is a North of Ireland woman, from the County of Fermanagh, it does not need to be told that her favourite and most prominent colour is orange. But at the same time she speaks very highly of her Catholic subjects, whom she reports as being the most dutiful in her realm. She was loud in her complaints of a falling off in the revenue of her country; but expected her soldiers to soon compel the delinquents to pay up. She is over fifty years of age, and says 'she has governed for more than twenty. She was in Canada when the Long Sault and Beauharnois canals were built, and after that served several years fighting in the war. Luckily, I had a Kingston street car ticket made of vulcanite, and of the size of a cent, to give her when asked, for a medal to adorn the person of the Empress. Before I left she produced the cap worn by her when dancing with the Prince of Wales. It was resplendent with military buttons. Before ascending the throne of her imaginary domain The Queen was a resident of Kingston.

How any woman could be guilty of such an atrocious act is indeed incomprehensible. Although she may have been ill-treated, and have had caused jealous still they cannot act as mitigating circumstances for the murder of her children. It is said that the children were unusually bright, smart, and intelligent. One of them was aged six and the other eight. When the woman was conveyed to the gaol she was in a hysterical state, and remained in that condition for some hours after she was locked up. On Tuesday afternoon she was perfectly rational, and conversed freely with our reporter. She gave what she called a whole history of her life, which dated back for nearly twenty years, but the most of her story related only to domestic difficulties existing between her and her husband.—Norfolk Reformer.

Naval Engagement in Peruvian Waters.

ATTACK BY THE "SHAH" AND "AMEHYST" ON THE REBEL PERUVIAN RAM.

PANAMA, July 7.—The details of the battle between the Shah and Amethyst of the British navy, and the rebel Peruvian ram Huascar, are received. It occurred on 29th May. The English opened fire at about 600 yards, the first shot carrying away the flag of the Huascar, which was immediately replaced. The Huascar, replete with the heavy 300-pound Blakelys in the turret, and the Amethyst, laying off and on, steadily persisted in attempts to rake the ram. The Shah fired eight broadsides, which were discharged by electricity and in a few moments everything on the Huascar's decks, except the masts, turret, and smoke stack, disappeared. The Huascar continued to fire at regular intervals. A shell from the Amethyst entered one of forward ports, exploding inside, killing one and wounding several. After the fight had lasted about an hour, the Amethyst was seen with thick smoke issuing from amidships, and steamed out of the action, not returning for twenty minutes, leaving the Huascar and Shah alone. The former attempted to ram her adversary, but the splendid handling of the Shah prevented any successful manoeuvre of this nature. One 800-pound shot struck the turret of the Huascar, penetrated the iron two inches, then rebounded on the side. She was hit twice by the same class of shot and with precisely the same result. The Peruvians now adopted a new mode of attack—first advancing on the Shah and then on the Amethyst, but the superior speed and superior management of these vessels prevented her ramming them. The battle lasted three hours; then the Huascar slowly retired, a shell from the Amethyst having destroyed all the primers for the turret guns, and she headed toward the land, for which she had been manoeuvring for some time. The enemy did not attempt to pursue, and contented themselves with receiving the last shots from the Huascar and remaining about two miles from the shore, keeping watch. The Huascar, although attacked at this time by musketry firing from Government troops, who imagined that a landing was to be attempted, sent a white flag to the captain of the port begging ammunition and asking permission to land a few wounded. Only one man was killed. This was refused, and an answer returned calling for the surrender of the ship. The Huascar being short of ammunition, and apprehending a repetition of the English attack, took advantage of a heavy fog, and slipped quietly down to Iquique, where the Government fleet was lying, and where Pierola hoped to make an arrangement for a combined action against the British forces. The movement was cautiously executed, and none too soon, for at about ten o'clock a steam launch from the Shah came stealing through the darkness with a torpedo, and by mere chance avoided fixing it to the side of a coasting steamer, mistaking her for the Huascar. The Zouave Trouble.

THE CAPTAIN'S VERSION.

We have been requested by Captain Simmonds to publish the following explanation of the unfortunate affair that took place on board his steamer on Dominion Day.

Editor of the Star:

Sir,—On leaving Queen's Wharf, Ottawa, Monday evening last, with a number of Papal Zouaves, I had my ensign hoisted aft and the Union Jack forward in commemoration of Dominion Day, when the Zouaves thought fit to have my Jack hauled down and their own flag hoisted in its place without ever having the courtesy to ask my consent, which would have readily been given. This I consider the greatest insult I have ever received. Seeing one of my men with the Jack under his arm I ordered him to rehoist it, which he blankly refused to do, and was backed in his refusal by my pilot, both of whom I have had arrested, in accordance with the Seamen's Extension Act 1878, for breach of discipline. Seeing the state of affairs, I took the flag from him and hoisted it myself, and, to prevent the Papal flag from blowing overboard, put my foot on it whilst hoisting the Jack. The moment my flag was at the masthead some thirty or forty of the Zouaves seized me by the throat in a most unarrantable and brutal manner directly under that flag from which I claim protection, and which as long as I have breath in me I will never allow to be insulted; not content with this they threatened to pitch me overboard, and I believe would have carried their threat into execution had not Mr. Collin Campbell, of the Civil Service, a priest and a French gentleman (whom I beg to thank sincerely) come to my rescue, whilst not one of my contemptible cowardly crew stirred to lend me a helping hand. I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of those gentlemen who assisted me and enabled me to get to my cabin where I was advised by a friendly priest to remain, but I am not in the habit of showing the white feather, and will always endeavour to do my duty and be at my post come what may. I am falsely accused of having deliberately thrown the Zouaves' flag overboard. I deny most emphatically having done so, as I had intended returning it to them had they not prevented me by their interference, by which they themselves lost their flag, for the moment they hauled me away, the flag being free blew over the side, a circumstance I sincerely regret. Another assertion they make, which is equally false, is that this action on my part was premeditated. I am sure nothing was farther from my thoughts. I have no animosity against any man, class, or religious sect; I believe every one has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, therefore it was no hatred or ill-feeling prompted me to act as I did. I felt what occurred was a gross insult, and only did what in my opinion I was perfectly justified in doing, and what I think any other British subject who had any spark of loyalty in him would have done. If I acted wrongly I am sorry for it, but I feel I only did my duty, and am sure that the flag which was so unwarrantably insulted will always protect me and all Her Majesty's loyal subjects.

Yours very respectfully,
T. SIMMONDS.

Montreal, July 6.—A meeting of the Directors of the Ottawa River Navigation Co., was held to-day to consider the trouble arising out of the emente on board the steamer Victoria. The result has been the approval of the captain's conduct in every particular except that he should have remonstrated with the Zouaves before pulling down their flag. He retains his position.

The above case was tried before the Police Magistrates in Ottawa on the 9th.

TITANS AND MEN.

"Blessed are the meek," 'exclaims the voice of inspiration, but can amean meek with the consciousness that a dreaded monster is consuming his vitals. We are not a race of Titans. A Prometheus might stand chained to the torturing rock with a vulture perpetually gnawing his liver, and his face ever wear an expression of heroic and even meek endurance. But Prometheus has left no descendants. With vultures (disease) consuming his liver, the modern man makes himself and every one around him miserable. Fretful, gloomy, hypochondriacal, he sees the world and life all on the wrong side—the dark side—and whoever dares to assert that there is a sunny side, he regards as an enemy, or at best a mocker of his imaginary woes. Unlike the mythical Titan, the victim of disease is not successful. There is an arm to rescue—a balm to cleanse and heal. As remedies for this most depressing of all diseases,—"Liver Complaint,"—none are more efficient or popular than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets. The Pellets effectually remove the effete and poisonous matter while the Medical Discovery imparts strength and health to the entire system. They are sold by druggists.

...the English attack, took advantage of a heavy fog, and slipped quietly down to Iquique, where the Government fleet was lying, and where Pierola hoped to make an arrangement for a combined action against the British forces. The movement was cautiously executed, and none too soon, for at about ten o'clock a steam launch from the Shah came stealing through the darkness with a torpedo, and by mere chance avoided fixing it to the side of a coasting steamer, mistaking her for the Huascar. When the departure of the ram was made known the English vessels disappeared.

The President of Peru has issued a proclamation, in which he declares that he will exact from Great Britain explanations and satisfaction consequent on such a wanton outrage on a friendly power.

The officers of the Shah give, in substance, the following account of events after the battle:—

After the engagement and the surrender of the Huascar to the Government, the Shah and Amethyst visited Iquique, and held some intercourse with the Peruvian fleet which still remained at that port. The reason stated for not capturing the Huascar is that the Shah and Amethyst could not follow her into the shoal water near the shore. Neither of the English ships were injured during the combat. The Huascar was hit no less than seventy times during the engagement. The handling and fighting of the rebel ram was admirable. The Shah would have entered Callao Bay on her way north, but was met by a steamer with the British Consul on board outside the harbour, and advised to keep on her voyage, and thereby avoid any further collision with the Peruvians, who, he said, were prepared to give her a hot reception in case she entered into any of their ports.

Breach of Promise Action Against a Lady.

At Dublin a singular breach of promise case was tried in the Common Pleas, before Chief Justice Morris and a special jury. The usual position of the parties was reversed, the gentleman being the plaintiff and the lady the defendant. Plaintiff, a butcher named Knowles, made the acquaintance of Mrs. Caroline Elizabeth Verschoyle (now Mulligan), the defendant, in October last on board a steamboat during the voyage from Liverpool to Dublin. She was the widow of Captain Verschoyle, mistress of a fine residence—Roebuck Hall—in the county Dublin, and mother of three children. Knowles was a widower, with one child. The acquaintance so rapidly ripened that in a short time she consented to become his bride. Being of different religions there was some difficulty about their marriage in Dublin, and they went to Liverpool, where they found it necessary to stop fourteen days before they could get married by the registrar, the expenses of the journey, which he swore amounted to £150, being paid by the plaintiff. In the meantime the lady's friends influenced her to break off the match, and she returned to Dublin without the plaintiff. She afterwards married a dealer in periodicals, named Andrew Mulligan, who is now master of Roebuck Hall, and a co-defendant in the suit. The examination of the plaintiff caused great merriment. After twenty minutes' deliberation the jury gave him $200 damages.

make, which is equally false, is that this action on my part was premeditated. I am sure nothing was farther from my thoughts. I have no animosity against any man, class, or religious sect; I believe every one has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience; therefore it was no hatred or ill-feeling prompted me to act as I did. I felt what occurred was a gross insult, and only did what in my opinion I was perfectly justified in doing, and what I think any other British subject who had any spark of loyalty in him would have done. If I acted wrongly I am sorry for it, but I feel I only did my duty, and am sure that the flag which was so unwarrantably insulted will always protect me and all Her Majesty's loyal subjects.

Yours very respectfully,
T. SIMMONDS.

The above case was tried before the Police Magistrates in Ottawa on the 9th. Myrand, the insubordinate deck-hand has been sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment for disobeying orders. Cousineau, the other prisoner, was discharged.

Shocking Murder.

A WOMAN KILLS HER TWO CHILDREN AND ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

A most shocking murder occurred at Canfield Station on Sunday morning last, the details of which are horrible in the extreme, and lead one almost to wonder if this is a Christian land in which we live. The person who committed this most inhuman act is a woman, apparently of about 35 years of age, and from appearances she does not look like one who would be guilty of such a fearful deed, and we cannot help but think she was labouring under temporary insanity at the time, although at present she is perfectly rational, and aware of the consequence of the act. It appears that for some time she has lived with her husband on very bad terms, and from her account she has been ill-treated. From suspicions she had contracted, and from the interference of other parties, she became jealous of her husband, and imagined he kept company of bad women, and for this reason, and because she says she was ill-treated, she assigns the cause of the murder of her children. There is no doubt she is of a very excitable nature, and that her feelings had been worked up to a dreadful pitch, making her almost crazy from jealous excitement. The prisoner's name is Mary Jane Pevey, wife of Christopher Pevey, employed as section-boss on the Canada Southern Railroad at Canfield Station. It appears that Pevey went away and said that he was never coming back. The prisoner had got it in her head that he had gone off with another woman, and imagined that the people of the place were down on her. On Sunday morning she set fire to her house, and took her two children to the cistern, struck them on the head with a stone, threw them into the cistern, which was nearly full of water, and then jumped in herself, intending to commit suicide. The fire, attracted some people, and the prisoner was found clinging to the top of the cistern with her hands, and her feet caught on the opposite side. The children were both dead. Their heads were badly bruised, but they had evidently been thrown in the water while yet alive.

A coroner's inquest was held on the remains of the children, and the jury returned a verdict that they had come to their death at the hands of their mother while labouring under a fit of temporary insanity. The prisoner was lodged in the Simcoe gaol on Monday last.

How any woman could be guilty of such an atrocious act is indeed incomprehensible. Although she may have been

Of the 159 female inmates one stands above all the rest, and is treated with the greatest respect. She is known as The Queen, or, as she herself gives her title, Queen Victoria, Owner of this Dominion, and Empress of India. She has crowns, medals, ribbons, necklaces innumerable, and when Her Majesty was introduced to the writer as the Duke of Buccleugh she could not have had on less than thirty pounds of brass and glass in the shape of buttons and buckles, and taking this off she displayed another one not the less hidden by ornaments. How many more brazen layers were below the last I cannot say. She wore one very large necklace given her by the Lord Mayor. When asked if she wore the Order of the Garter she replied of course she did, but she did not care to show it because the matron was looking. She had evidently misconstrued the question. When it is said she is a North of Ireland woman, from the County of Fermanagh, it does not need to be told that her favourite and most prominent colour is orange. But at the same time she speaks very highly of her Catholic subjects, whom she reports as being the most dutiful in her realm. She was loud in her complaints of a falling off in the revenue of her country; but expected her soldiers to soon compel the delinquents to pay up. She is over fifty years of age, and says she has governed for more than twenty. She was in Canada when the Long Sault and Beauharnois canals were built, and after that served several years fighting in the war. Luckily, I had a Kingston street car ticket made of vulcanite, and of the size of a cent, to give her when asked, for a medal to adorn the person of the Empress. Before I left she produced the cap worn by her when dancing with the Prince of Wales. It was resplendent with military buttons. Before ascending the throne of her imaginary domain The Queen was a resident of Kingston.

How any woman could be guilty of such an atrocious act is indeed incomprehensible. Although she may have been ill-treated, and have had caused jealousy, still they cannot act as mitigating circumstances for the murder of her children. It is said that the children were unusually bright, smart, and intelligent. One of them was aged six and the other eight. When the woman was conveyed to the gaol she was in a hysterical state, and remained in that condition for some hours after she was locked up. On Tuesday afternoon she was perfectly rational, and conversed freely with our reporter. She gave what she called a whole history of affairs, which dated back for nearly two years, but the most of her story relates only to domestic difficulties existing between her and her husband.—Norfolk Reformer.

Sentenced.

Henry Gilbert arraigned for the robbery of Spencer's store has been sentenced to hard labor in the Central Prison for one year.

Napanee Dramatic Association.

The appearance of the troupe in Picton in 'Never too Late to Mend' drew crowded houses. The company is very highly spoken of by the Pictonians.

Sudden Death.

Mr. John McAfee, aged 66, a resident of Napanee, dropped dead in the street in Newburgh at half past five Monday afternoon.

Stone Throwing.

A little boy of Mr. John Dunham's was severely injured on the head by a stone thrown by another lad. Through the surgical skill of Dr. Cowan the boy is now out of danger.

Brewer's License Decision.

Inspector vs. John Bowey, a fine of $25 was imposed on the defendant. The Inspector says Mr. Bowey should have a wholesale license, but defendant, holding a brewer's license claims that as sufficient. An appeal has been made to the County Judge.

The Stadacona Ins. Co.

It is said the Directors of Stadacona Insurance Company have arrived at the conclusion that they have been rather premature in closing up the business, and have called a meeting of the stockholders to take into consideration the propriety of going on again.

Sign Painting.

We have had occasion to call attention to the artistic talent of that rising young artist, Mr. Frank Hamilton. His work is conspicuous in several places around town. Parties needing anything in this line should give him their patronage.

The Schooner Grant.

Arrived here at 9 a. m., yesterday, direct from Toledo Ohio, with 10,200 bushels of corn for Diamond & Sherwood. Although the Grant was drawing 8 ft. 6 in. she had no trouble in coming up the river without getting aground. The corn is as fine a quality as we ever saw, and speaks well for the enterprise of Messrs. Diamond & Sherwood.

Business Increasing.

Messrs. Diamond & Sherwoods Flour & Feed Store on John st. is now in full blast under the management of Mr. Than Paisley. Although only a week has elapsed since the opening, yet their sales so far are very encouraging. This speaks well for the locality as a business stand, and also for the excellence of material supplied, with the low scale of prices and fairness of dealing—essential matters, which will certainly secure an increasing patronage.

Excursion.

The Y. M. C. A. Excursion from Kingston to the Falls, on Wednesday included 17 cars, an extra engine being attached, 127 passengers got aboard at Napanee. Another cheap trip over the same route can be taken from Belleville on the 28th inst., the small sum of $2.60 being charged for the round trip. Excursions will be run from Kingston Niagara Falls every Saturday during the season for a return ticket of $5.00 and good for seven days.

Presentation and Address.

On Monday evening, the friends of the Rev. W. S. Blackstock, and the members of the Methodist Church, presented that gentleman with a purse of $51.25 accompanied with an address to himself and Mrs. Blackstock. The presentation took place at the residence of Mr. Edwin Dickens and elicited a very touching reply. At the invitation of Mrs. Dickens the company enjoyed a repast of ice cream and cakes, and a pleasant and social evening was spent with the reverend gentleman who left by train on Wednesday.

The 'Pilgrim'

This new candidate for public patronage commenced her regular trips on Monday, between Napanee and Mill Point. She is a steam yacht, owned by Rathbun & Son, about 50 ft. keel, with a nicely upholstered stateroom fore and aft. Being very fast she will prove a great favorite with passengers, carrying about 50 including luggage and extra freight. For the present she leaves Napanee at 6 and 9 a. m. and 1.15 and 5.15 p. m. Leaves the Point at 7.45 and 11.15 a. m., and 3.30 and 6.30 p. m., connecting with the Bay boat, and being at the service of excursionists in Napanee every evening. Time 75 mins. Fare for the round trip 40 cts. Capt. John Stewart is a great favorite and will give all further information or Mr. R. Shipman at Rathbun's dock.

True Blues' Banner.

A fine banner has been procured by the Dartmouth Lodge of True Blues Napanee. It is, on one side, blue silk with crimson border, and in the centre an equestrian portrait of King William on the other side, white silk, with purple

Personal.

The Hon. R. J. Cartwright paid us a flying visit on Tuesday.

Off to the Thousand Isles.

The Pioneer, Capt. Jack Dickens left on Monday for a cruise in the St. Lawrence. She ships a few invited guests at Kingston.

New Steamer.

Capt. Collier's steamer, the New York, arrived in port on Tuesday evening. She is a paddle-wheel, and being of great beam and very commodious will be very steady for excursions. She left for Belleville on Thursday morning.

A Harbor Obstruction.

A dangerous and hidden obstruction to our river navigation lies directly in the channel, about midway between Mr. Isiah Huffmans and Mr. John Congers. It is a large rock about seven feet across the top, and only six feet below high water mark. Several vessels have been more or less damaged by striking this unseen danger. The Kincardine broke her wheel and the old Ivanhoe was similarly damaged twice. Rathbun's tug has also collided at different times, besides several schooners and other vessels not reported. Each case involves a loss of over $25, with the attendant delay &c. The above fact are well known to vessel owners and navigators, it seems strange that such a fatal spot should be overlooked while so much useless mud was carefully removed during the progress of dredging. Mr. Neil McCullough has been diving and making a careful survey of the exact location, and size of the rock in question, he offers to remove it for $60 we believe he has tendered to the authorities to that effect. Mr. M. is thoroughly competent to undertake this task and the sum asked, is as nothing compared with its removal.

Base Ball—Return Match.

On Tuesday the return match was played between the Dufferins of Bath and the Silver Leafs of Napanee, on the latter's ground. The Dufferins are composed of grown-up boys—men, in fact, forming a striking contrast with our youngsters, but the disparity in size was counterbalanced by the extraordinary skill and activity of the Leafs, who showed some of the finest playing it has been our lot to witness. The fielding especially, was worthy of all praise, in several cases a Leaf would dodge under the legs of his full grown opponent, in his determination to catch or stop a ball, while a Dufferin would walk over a Leaf with the greatest equanimity. One great drawback, was the inability of the Dufferin umpire, who, it seems, did not know the A B C of base ball rules, and his decisions (?) were a constant source of irritation and disagreement. The following is the score:—

BEAVER LAKE.

We had an exhibition by the school at the Lake School House on the noon of Friday the 6th ult., all the tators were amused and instructed their recitations, compositions, read songs, &c. Several prizes were awarded the pupils, an premiums for punctu- tendance and good conduct.

To the praise of our teacher (Hayek) and her pupils, we would there was not one complaint en- during the time of her service. March. It seems that she is one of fortunate teachers who have a knack of turning the hearts of the p towards her, this accords with the s ments of Seneca who gives us a charm, the secret is "Love, says he order to be loved," no being eve drew another by the use of terror authority.

The 12th is near, and great is the temptation of many around this loc and the vicinity of Tamworth for coming celebration of the 'Boyne' cess to the celebrators.

CLOYNE.

DEAR EXPRESS:—

We have been visited since the mi of June, up to the present time magnificent rains, and all kinds of g and vegetables are in a thriving cond in fact we have all the rain the far could wish for. Crops look promis- yet, but there is one great trouble makes the farmers around Cloyn serious, and that is, the grasshops they have replaced that destructive b—the potato bug, and a field of g soon looks very sick under their t ment.

A servant girl by the name of Andrews (at Mr. W. Campbells, chant of Flinton) threw herself fr bridge, with suicidal intentions, a number of boys in the i prevented her striking the water, was rescued from drowning by a neig who witnessed the act. She tells the story, unrequited affection. a man n John Campbell promised to marry and 'went back on his promise' she is delirious, the doctor says she may cover but her brain is badly injured she will be crippled for life. Mrs. Ca rine Trip was delivered of a fine pa twins on the 29th ult. Mrs. Mary Somers was also blessed with triplets the 1st inst.—both of Flinton.

Mrs. W. Wager, while looking for in a hay loft, fell and broke her leg, is fast recovering.

Steamship Collision at Montreal.

TWO OCEAN STEAMERS SUNK IN THE CI NEL—LOSS $175,000.

On the afternoon of the 4th inst., ocean steamships, the Elphinstone Redewater collided and sunk just b Montreal. The Redewater, which coming down with the full force of current, finding it impossible to avo collision, steered straight for the Elp stoneto strike her amidships. Both ge were badly injured by the collision, accident proving to be one of the w that has occurred. As soon as the ves could be separated an attempt was n to run the Elphinstone into the Mont harbour, but before reaching it she fi and sank. The Redewater, which sunk had a cargo of 64,427 bush. e fully insured, and valued at $50,000, was bound to London. She is cw at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. The g in swelling burst the vessels deck. Elphinstone is a schooner-rigged i ship of 1,700 tons register, with a bur of over 2,500 tons, and was built in B at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. She laden with a cargo of 2,000 tons, val

We have had occasion to call attention to the artistic talent of that rising young artist, Mr. Frank Hamilton. His work is conspicuous in several places around town. Parties needing anything in this line should give him their patronage.

The Schooner Grant.

Arrived here at 9 a. m., yesterday, direct from Toledo Ohio, with 10,200 bushels of corn for Diamond & Sherwood. Although the Grant was drawing 8 ft. 6 in. she had no trouble in coming up the river without getting aground. The corn is as fine a quality as we ever saw, and speaks well for the enterprise of Messrs. Diamond & Sherwood.

Pitch, Tar, Terpentine.

Coal oil, Whale oil, Seal oil, Paint oil, Olive oil, Hair grease, Hog's lard, Tallow and Bear's grease can all be removed by Prof. Spence's Chemical Erasive Soap, and the most delicate fabric will remain uninjured, call and see the professor at the Brisco House.

Out for a Day's Sport.

A gay and festive youth borrowed a rig from Nelson German, and a horse from Harris & Empey, ostensibly for attending to his employer's business, but in reality to take a fair companion for an airing in Briggs' woods. Not returning in due time Mr Empey started in search, meeting his animal returning at a brisk trot from that direction, minus his gay driver and partner, who have not since filed an appearance to settle their bill and clear up suspicions.

'Ye Caxton Memorial.'

We have received a memorial number of the Dominion Printer, containing a history of the art of Printing, and its introduction into England by Wm. Caxton in the 15th. century. It contains a sketch of Caxton's life, and fac-simile impressions of the type made and used in his time, also an interesting illustrated account of type-founding in America and a Chronology of notable events in the Art of Printing. Published by the Dominion Type Founding Co. Montreal and Toronto, the only establishment of its kind in Canada, and whose work—as is well known—rivals anything of the kind elsewhere.

Consumption of Whiskey.

The following is a statement of the number of barrels and proof gallons of whiskey, paid duty at Napanee and consumed in town and vicinity for the fiscal year just ended, June 30th., 1877.

Sept. quarter 1876	113 bbls.	or 3,676.35 proof gals.
Dec. "	115 "	or 3,759.42 "
Mar. "	117 "	or 3,882.17 "
June "	45 "	or 1,484.93 "

391 bbls. or 12,736.87 proof gals

It will be seen from the above that the amount consumed has decreased about two-thirds since the March quarter. At the old rates—taking the population at 4,000—it would leave about three gallons for every inhabitant, but the whiskey consumed, duty paid elsewhere, would about double the amount.

School Children—Important Decision.

A school case of considerable importance was tried at the Huron County Court recently. It was an appeal from a conviction by two magistrates, in which a parent was fined $1 and costs, for not sending his children between seven and twelve years of age, to school for at least four months in the year, or otherwise providing for their education. The conviction was affirmed, but no costs were given, as the law was new, and the present case was the first which had come before the Judge. The point decided is important: That children between seven and twelve are entitled as of right to be educated either at school or elsewhere for at least four months in the year; that if educated at home the teaching must not be desultory, an hour now and a half hour again, but continuous and otherwise equal to what would be obtained in the common school of the section.

cream and cakes, and a pleasant and social evening was spent with the reverend gentleman who left by train on Wednesday.

The 'Pilgrim'

This new candidate for public patronage commenced her regular trips on Monday, between Napanee and Mill Point. She is a steam yacht, owned by Rathbun & Son, about 50 ft. keel, with a nicely upholstered stateroom fore and aft. Being very fast she will prove a great favorite with passengers, carrying about 50 including luggage and extra freight. For the present she leaves Napanee at 6 and 9 a. m. and 1.15 and 5.15 p. m. Leaves the Point at 7.45 and 11.15 a. m., and 3.30 and 6.30 p. m., connecting with the Bay boat, and being at the service of excursionists in Napanee every evening. Time 75 mins. Fare for the round trip 40 cts. Capt. John Stewart is a great favorite and will give all further information or Mr. R. Shipman at Rathbun's dock.

True Blues' Banner.

A fine banner has been procured by the Dartmouth Lodge of True Blues Napanee. It is, on one side, blue silk with crimson border, and in the centre an equestrian portrait of King William on the other side, white silk, with purple border in the centre a view of the ship Dartmouth, both with appropriate mottoes and tastefully ornamented with gold fringe tassels &c. The painting by Mr. Wm. Robinson, Jr. of Kingston, is certainly the best specimen in its line we have ever seen, the artistic part cannot be excelled, and the pliability, smoothness, and freedom from cracking—an important matter in a banner—pronounce it a worthy effort of the artist.

Roman Catholic Picnic

The Crystal Palace grounds presented a gay appearance on Monday at the annual picnic, although there were other attractions in town yet it is estimated that at least 1200 were present. Refreshments and ice cream were served in abundance by Mr. B. & Co. Music was furnished by Morgan's and the Napanee band, and dancing and other amusements were generally indulged in, the contest for the gold-headed cane, between the admirers of Sir John and the Hon. R. J. Cartwright, was an exciting scene, the universal popularity of the latter gentleman was evident by the sweeping majority of 400 over his opponent. The cane was very tastefully gotten up, and is the handiwork of our townsman Mr. Fred Smith. The body is rosewood, surmounted by a golden-head finely chased and engraved, and containing the following inscription.

Presented to the Hon. R. J. Cartwright, at the R. C. Picnic, Napanee, July 10th 1877 by the popular vote of over 400 over Right Hon. Sir John A. MacDonald.

The great attraction of the day was a temperance address by Father Stafford of Lindsay, who was here on invitation from Father McDonagh and the Mayor. Previous to the address the entire place was filled, on the platform were Mayor Williams, chair; Father Stafford, Lindsay; Conally, Carden; Denohue, Erin-

Base Ball—Return Match.

On Tuesday the return match was played between the Dufferins of Bath and the Silver Leafs of Napanee, on the latter's ground. The Dufferins are composed of grown-up boys—men, in fact, forming a striking contrast with our youngsters, but the disparity in size was counterbalanced by the extraordinary skill and activity of the Leafs, who showed some of the finest playing it has been our lot to witness. The fielding especially, was worthy of all praise, in several cases a Leaf would dodge under the legs of his full grown opponent, in his determination to catch or stop a ball, while a Dufferin would walk over a Leaf with the greatest equanimity. One great drawback, was the inability of the Dufferin umpire, who, it seems, did not know the A B C of base-ball rules, and his decisions (?) were a constant source of irritation and disagreement. The following is the score:—

After the match a supper was tendered the Dufferins, but the hospitable offer was declined. $25 was staked by the Leafs, against a match in any place their opponents might name, we believe the bet was not taken.

Cricket.

An exciting and well-contested match between Pictou and Napanee was played in the latter place on Tuesday, bets were freely exchanged and great interest was taken in the play, which was very steady throughout, closing at 6:30. Napanee winning by one run and three wickets. After a supper at the Campbell House, our guests started for home on the Steamer Shannon, as the boat left the wharf, cheers were given for the Pictonites which were heartily returned, with three for the ladies who enlivened the scene by their presence. TWO OCEAN STEAMERS SUNK IN THE CHANNEL—LOSS $175,000.

On the afternoon of the 4th inst., two ocean steamships, the Elphinstone and Redewater collided and sunk just below Montreal. The Redewater, which was coming down with the full force of the current, finding it impossible to avoid collision, steered straight for the Elphinstone to strike her amidships. Both vessels were badly injured by the collision, the accident proving to be one of the worst that has occurred. As soon as the vessel could be separated an attempt was made to run the Elphinstone into the Montreal harbour, but before reaching it she filled and sank. The Redewater, which also sunk had a cargo of 64,427 bush. corn fully insured, and valued at $50,000, she was bound to London. She is owned at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. The grain in swelling burst the vessels deck. The Elphinstone is a schooner-rigged iron ship of 1,700 tons register, with a burden of over 2,500 tons, and was built in 1874 at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. She is laden with a cargo of 2,000 tons, valued at $50,000, consisting of iron rails and coals. She lies now in the main channel opposite Bouchard's Hotel, Hochelaga to which point she was brought after the collision in an unsuccessful attempt to steam her up to the Hochelaga Wharf where she was to have discharged her cargo. Her bow was completely smashed in, the iron, which is about an inch thick, being torn off the port side for fifteen feet. She is full of water, and when the collision occurred the water rushed in so quickly that those in the cabin had not too much time to escape, saving a small portion of their provisions and clothes. The pilots are said to be the cause of the accident.

Outrage on a Married Woman.

Hamilton, July 6.—Rather a peculiar case came up for examination before the Police Magistrate last evening. Phineas Glover, of Barton, a youth of fifteen or sixteen years of age, was charged with criminally assaulting a married woman named Florence Cline, of Stoney Creek. It appears from the evidence taken that Mrs. Cline was driving to Hamilton in a buggy on the 27th ult., when she overtook Glover, who asked for a ride. Permission being given, he took his place in the buggy, and after proceeding some distance the young scoundrel committed an outrage on the woman. Mrs. Cline stated in Court that she had not told her husband of the circumstance until yesterday, being afraid to do so; that at the time it happened, as at the present, she was very weak, being in poor health from dropsy of the heart. After hearing the evidence his Worship committed Glover to stand his trial at the Assizes.

Cock-fight in "Canaan."

This is not the place mentioned in sacred history, but that lawless settlement, where base-ball, fishing parties, hooting matches, dog fights, seven-up and old sledge occupy the leisure moments of the rural population Sundays and Mondays. On Dominion Day, we suddenly dropped on a party of sportsmen engaged in testing the combative qualities of four pugacious roosters. We recently received an invitation to the return match, the betting ran high, the loubloons changed hands with celerity and a solicitation to act as referee, takeholder &c., was politely declined. Among the spectators were three prominent moral (?) reformers, two justices of peace, a legal gentleman, and an insurance agent, they appeared deeply interested in the fun, which was subsequently accounted for by the satisfaction with which they pocketed their hot share of the spoils. The fighting was vicious, and the savage attacks elicited shouts of applause from the respective backers. During the performance we were enlightened as the merits of 'games,' 'dunghills' and cross-breeds. After three hours steady play, in which a beligerent bird received a thrust through the jugular, all hands adjourned to refresh exhausted nature from a five-gallon demijohn of soda-water, not forgetting the 'moral' gentlemen, who, of course, proved themselves equal to the occasion the whole party dispersing just as the 'peelers' appeared in view.

Messrs. Giffard, Deroh, Morden, Casey and others. Father Stafford's address was replete with sound logic and invincible argument. It abounded in facts and figures and appealed in a straight-forward manner to the feelings of his hearers who were kept in want attention throughout. The address was marked with an entire absence of that useless tirade against liquor drinkers and producers, which is often resorted to, and with such a bad effect, but the kind and gentlemanly tone, won the sympathy and touched the hearts of all the listeners. At its close a vote of thanks to the Rev. Father Stafford was moved by A. L. Morden, Esq., License Commissioner, and seconded by T. W. Casey, Esq., G. W. S., and adopted with much applause. In the evening the concert in the Music Hall drew a full house, the following programme was excellently rendered: Overture, Zampa, Prof. J. Z. Des Rochers; song, "Robert le Diable," Mrs. P. A Harbor Obstruction.

A dangerous and hidden obstruction to our river navigation lies directly in the channel, about midway between Mr. Isaiah Huffmance and Mr. John Congers. It is a large rock about seven feet across the top, and only six feet below high water mark. Several vessels have been more or less damaged by striking this unseen danger. The Kincardine broke her wheel and the old Ivanhoe was similarly damaged twice. Rathburn's tug has also collided at different times, besides several schooners and other vessels not reported. Each case involves a loss of over $25, with the attendant delay &c. The above act are well known to vessel owners and navigators, it seems strange that such a fatal spot should be overlooked while so much useless mud was carefully removed during the progress of dredging. Mr. Neil McCullough has been diving and making a careful survey of the exact location, and size of the rock in question, he offers to remove it for $600 we believe he has tendered to the authorities to that effect. Mr. M. is thoroughly competent to undertake this task and the sum asked, is as nothing compared with its removal.

Base Ball—Return Match.

On Tuesday the return match was played between the Dufferins of Bath and the Silver Leafs of Napanee, on the latter's ground. The Dufferins are composed of grown-up boys—men, in fact, forming a striking contrast with our youngsters, but the disparity in size was counterbalanced by the extraordinary skill and activity of the Leafs, who showed some of the finest playing it has been our lot to witness. The fielding especially, was worthy of all praise, in several cases a Leaf would dodge under the legs of his full grown opponent, in his determination to catch or stop a ball, while a Dufferin would walk over a Leaf with the greatest equanimity. One great drawback, was the inability of the Dufferin umpire, who, it seems, did not know the A B C of base ball rules, and his decisions (?) were a constant source of irritation and disagreement. The following was the score:—

BEAVER LAKE.

We had an exhibition by the scholars at the Lake School House on the afternoon of Friday the 6th ult., all the spectators were amused and instructed by their recitations, compositions, readings, songs, &c. Several prizes were awarded the pupils, an premiums for punctual attendance and good conduct.

To the praise of our teacher (Miss Hayek) and her pupils, we would say there was not one complaint entered during the time of her service from March. It seems that she is one of those fortunate teachers who have a happy knack of turning the hearts of the pupils towards her, this accords with the sentiments of Seneca who gives us a love charm, the secret is "Love, say he, in order to be loved," no being ever yet drew another by the use of terror and authority.

The 12th is near, and great is the contemplation of many around this locality, and the vicinity of Tamworth for the coming celebration of the 'Boyne' success to the celebrators.

Yours, GORHEBYDD

CLOYNE.

DEAR EXPRESS:—

We have been visited since the middle of June, up to the present time with magnificent rains, and all kinds of grain and vegetables are in a thriving condition in fact we have all the rain the farmers could wish for. Crops look promising as yet, but there is one great trouble that makes the farmers around Cloyn look serious, and that is, the grasshoppers, they have replaced that destructive beetle—the potato bug, and a field of grain soon looks very sick under their treatment.

A servant girl by the name of Mary Andrews (at Mr. W. Campbells, merchant of Flinton) threw herself from a bridge, with suicidal intentions, but a number of boys in the river prevented her striking the water, she was rescued from drowning by a neighbor who witnessed the act. She tells the old story, unrequited affection, a man named John Campbell promised to marry her and 'went back on his promise' she is very delirious, the doctor says she may recover but her brain is badly injured and she will be crippled for life. Mrs. Catherine Trip was delivered of a fine pair of twins on the 29th ult. Mrs. Mary Ann Somers was also blessed with triplets on the 1st inst.—both of Flinton.

Mrs. W. Wager, while looking for eggs in a hay loft, fell and broke her leg, she is fast recovering.

July 2nd, 1877. T. G. DICKIE.

Steamship Collision at Montreal.

TWO OCEAN STEAMERS SUNK IN THE CHANNEL—LOSS $175,000.

On the afternoon of the 4th inst., two ocean steamships, the Elphinstone and Redewater collided and sunk just below Montreal. The Redewater, which was coming down with the full force of the current, finding it impossible to avoid a collision, steered straight for the Elphinstone to strike her amidships. Both vessels were badly injured by the collision, the accident proving to be one of the worst that has occurred. As soon as the vessels could be separated an attempt was made to run the Elphinstone into the Montreal harbour, but before reaching it she filled and sank. The Redewater, which also sank had a cargo of 64,427 bush. corn fully insured, and valued at $50,000, she was bound to London. She is owned at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. The grain in swelling burst the vessels' deck. The Elphinstone is a schooner-rigged iron ship of 1,700 tons register, with a burden

Cricket.

An exciting and well-contested match between Picton and Napanee was played at the latter place on Tuesday, bets were freely exchanged and great interest was taken in the play, which was very steady throughout, closing at 6:30. Napanee winning by one run and three wickets. After a supper at the Campbell House, guests started for home on the Steam-Ship Shannon, as the boat left the wharf, the Pictonites which were given for the Pictonites which were heartily returned, with three for the Pictonites who enlivened the scene by their sense. The grain in swelling burst the vessels deck. The Elphinstone is a schooner-rigged iron ship of 1,700 tons register, with a burden of over 2,500 tons, and was built in 1874, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng. She is laden with a cargo of 2,000 tons, valued at $50,000, consisting of iron rails and coals. She lies now in the main channel, opposite Bouchard's Hotel, Hochelaga, to which point she was brought after the collision in an unsuccessful attempt to steam her up to the Hochelaga Wharf, where she was to have discharged her cargo. Her bow was completely smashed in, the iron, which is about an inch thick, being torn off the port side for fifteen feet. She is full of water, and when the collision occurred the water rushed in so quickly that those in the cabin had not too much time to escape, saving a small portion of their provisions and clothes. The pilots are said to be the cause of the accident.

Outrage on a Married Woman.

Hamilton, July 6.—Rather a peculiar case came up for examination before the Police Magistrate last evening. Phineas Glover, of Barton, a youth of fifteen or sixteen years of age, was charged with criminally assaulting a married woman named Florence Cline, of Stoney Creek. It appears from the evidence taken that Mrs. Cline was driving to Hamilton in a buggy on the 27th ult., when she overtook Glover, who asked for a ride. Permission being given, he took his place in the buggy, and after proceeding some distance the young scoundrel committed an outrage on the woman. Mrs. Cline stated in Court that she had not told her husband of the circumstance until yesterday, being afraid to do so; that at the time it happened, as at the present, she was very weak, being in poor health from dropsy of the heart. After hearing the evidence his Worship committed Glover to stand his trial at the Assizes.

Harriet Martineau is accused of having abused the confidence of hospitality.

The report of the New York Custom House Commission will be submitted to Secretary Sherman on his return. It will recommend a uniform of tax on all sugars two cents per pound. The Roman Catholics of New Rochelle N. Y., demand the substitution of their Bible for the Protestant version in the public schools. The Board of Education is considering the matter. Nine hundred dogs were drowned at the pound in New York on the 6th. Of 240 bites inflicted on the dog catchers thus far, 200 were by Spitz dogs. The Fourth of July celebration by the coloured people in Charleston, S. C., was the largest in many

Neglect of Pastures.

This is the only country in the world, the Chicago Times says, where any pretensions are made to good farming that no attention is given to improving pastures. In taking up a new farm, the poorest portion is invariably set apart for the pasture. After the best portions are planted and sown to annual crops, so long as they will pay the cost of cultivation, the land is seeded down with grass. This is cut and cured for hay, till the farmer is ashamed of himself of the small amount he gets from an acre, when he concludes that he will convert the field into a pasture. He seldom seems to think that his pasture is his great source of wealth; that his cows get from it the materials which furnish milk; that the grass it produces makes most of the wool, beef, and mutton he has to sell; and that all his young cattle obtain their living from the pasture about seven months in every year. He seems to forget that he and his teams work all summer chiefly to obtain food which the stock consumes during the winter, while his pastures furnish a supply for a longer period, without any labor being expended upon them.

Land once turned out to pasture is doomed to neglect so long as it is devoted to that purpose. Weeds and bushes are permitted to spring up and spread at will. As the grass in places becomes killed out, the spots are allowed to remain barren. A large proportion of the stock kept in the pasture are yarded at night, and most of their droppings are left, when they are taken to cultivate fields. Even those that fall on the pastures are not broken up and scattered, as they should be. The rank grasses which spring up, but which are not eaten by the stock, are allowed to go to seed, and in this way gradually extended over a large portion of the ground. No Western farmer thinks to apply farm-yard, mineral, or commercial fertilizers to his pasture. If a portion of it happens to become rich by the cattle, sheep, or colts remaining on it during the night, the chances are that he will plow it up and put it in cultivated crops; and turn out another piece of land that is in too poor condition to produce corn, grain, or hay.

In England pastures receive constant attention and increase in productiveness year by year. They are generally in so high a state of fertility that a good crop of hay may be harvested from them, if the stock is taken off, as is done occasionally. They are manured like lands which produce annual crops, the fertilizers being applied late in the fall or very early in the spring. They are ordinarily mown at least once every season, so as to keep down the weeds and coarse grasses. By cutting them off, short grasses spring up, while the and rank grasses that are cut down help to enrich the soil. The turf, once well established, may not be turned during a century; but it is occasionally scarified by a utensil made especially for the purpose, so as to lay bare some fresh soil, on which the seed of more valuable grasses may be sown. A great variety of grasses is produced on English pastures and attention is given to seeding peculiar soils and locations with grasses that are adapted to them. In this country little or no attention is given to this matter, but the grasses are left to establish themselves as best they will. In some localities white clover, redtop, and blue grass, all good pasture grasses, will, by a process of self-seeding or extension of their roots, establish themselves over a considerable amount of ground. Under unfavorable circumstances, however, sorrel, burdock, thistles, and coarse grasses will take possession of the land.—N. Y. Independent.

The Potato Bug

Professor Goossman, of the Agricultural College, has thoroughly analyzed the effect of Paris green on the potato, and finds that the arsenic from it does not and cannot enter into the circulation of the vine, agreeing fully with the authorities of the Western colleges that no harm will come by the use of this poison. He adds:—

"Whilst I do not question its great efficiency for that purpose, I do not advocate its use. My objection does not merely rest on the assumption that the vines will absorb some arsenious acid, which in healthy, growing plants at best could be but very minute traces, and consequently of but little importance, but on the great danger unavoidably arising from an indiscriminate, wholesale distribution of one of the most poisonous substances of record, by uneducated parties. I recommend still as the safest efficient remedy the picking by hand at the earliest periods of the season."

A New Jersey man gives the following preventive:—"Take tobacco stems or refuse tobacco and steep, and to the decoction thus secured add lye from wood ashes or lye from potash, and sprinkle the liquid upon the vines with a common sprinkler." The farmer tried this liquid, by the advice of a chemist, with thorough success. And he says it not only drives away the bug, but destroys the eggs. Of the proper strength of the decoction, or the amount of lye necessary to make the application most successful, every intelligent farmer can judge for himself. The New Jersey man found it not only effectual against the potato-bug, but beneficial to the crops as a fertilizer.—N. E. Farmer.

The Time to Cut Grass

The proper time to cut grass for hay is a matter of some dispute, though the weight of testimony is in favor of early cutting. As an old writer on agriculture has wittily said, "grass should be cut while it is grass, and not after it has become hay." The flavor or richness of the grass passes away as soon as the stalk becomes dry, tough and fibrous and evidently much nourishment is lost, as well as the fragrance which gives it relish by leaving it standing too long. Farmers as a rule do not attach that importance to the hay crop which its real value

The rain and wind storm of 30th ult., did immense damage to crops in Canada and the States. Railway tracks washed away and buildings demolished. In Pittsburgh Pa., an oil works, and in Lacoma N. H., a Catholic church were burned by lightning.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided, as to church bells, that at thirty minutes before the hour of service upon Sunday the bells may be rung for five minutes, and that again for five minutes immediately preceding service time a bell of the smallest size may be rung. At all other times the noise is considered illegal.

The Medical Examiner says some of these dreadful pests have appeared in London. Rightly or wrongly, some of the persons who have been bitten, connect the appearance of the mosquitoes with the unloading of foreign grain. They have made their appearance on the north side of the Thames, between the London Docks and Pimlico.

Farmers as a rule do not attach that importance to the hay crop which its real value demands, and are apt to consider the exact time of harvesting it as a matter of no great consequence. But when it is considered that it is the crop that furnishes the largest share of food for both horses and cattle during at least half of the year, it will be admitted that it is of value enough to warrant the best care in cutting and curing. If it is cut at the right time a very few hours of sunshine will fit it for the mow or stack. It is better to put up a little damp than to have all its moisture dried out in the sun. It should be put away in such a condition as to show green and bright when fed out in the winter. It is then eaten with the greatest relish and yields the largest amount of nourishment. — Indiana Farmer.

Strawberry Short Cake.

One quart of flour, teacupful of butter, teacupful of ice-cold water. Mix the butter through the flour with a knife, pour over the the water and cut into a stiff dough. Roll it out like pastry, handling it as little as possible. Do not work it, or it will toughen. Cover two jelly cake pans, or two large dinner plates, bake in a quick oven. Split in half, making four layers of the short cake. Have two quarts of strawberries picked and well sugared before you commence to bake the cake. Cover three of the layers with the berries ; then put the handsomest layer on the top, and sprinkle it all over with sugar. Serve with thick, sweet cream.

Preserved Strawberries.—Weigh the fruit, wash if necessary, and place in a preserving kettle, in alternate layers, a pound of fruit and then a pound of sugar. Put on a slow fire until the sugar melts, then boil quite rapidly for thirty minutes. Remove the fruit with a perforated skimmer, and fill small cans to within an inch and a-half of the top. Boil and skim the juice a few minutes longer, fill the jars and seal while hot.

A deputation of citizens had an interview with the Right Hon. He pointed out that if they provided emigration on a large scale it would be taking valuable labour from this country.

In a recent missionary conference held at Oxford, Bishop Macdonnell, referring to medical missions, mentioned that Sir Henry Hallford, a celebrated physician, had pointed out that Dr. Broughton, by curing the Great Mogul's daughter, laid the foundation of English influence in India in the seventeenth century, and further suggested that much might be done by missionaries in India, and even in China, if they were educated primarily in medicine. Americans and English have, he stated, tried medical missions with great success in China.

INCIDENT. June 27.—While Thomas Edwards, a farmer from North Oxford, was driving through town to-day, on his way home with a mower and reaper on his waggon, the machine slipped forward against the horses, frightening them so that they started off at a rapid pace, throwing the machine off against Edwards' head, and dragging him some distance on the ground, bruising and cutting him in a frightful manner. Nearly the whole of his scalp was torn off, and one of his ankles is severely fractured. If not internally injured he may recover.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 29 years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe, soreness and pain under the shoulders and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with a cold dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely to your Catarrh Remedy. I am, Sir, very truly,
Yours truly,

A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated essay on the radical and permanent cure without medicine of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Inactivity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excessive sexual excitement.

Price, in sealed envelopes, only 10 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years successful practice, that advanced consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine, or the application of the knife, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and efficient, by means of which every sufferer, no matter how long his illness may be, may cure himself completely and safely.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man of the first Address

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Perkins &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that the Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added) who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., &c., which unfold
the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and beauty of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.
Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.
It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the publications issued are strictly evangelical,
and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CUTLER.
ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature
throughout the land.
References for further information may be made to the following brethren and others who may be added, who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

Widder Greene's Last Words

"I'm goin' to die," says the Widder Greene
 "I'm goin' to quit this airtly scene;
 It ain't no place for me to stay,
 In such a world as't is to-day.
 Such works and ways is too much for me,
 Nobody can't let nobody be.
 The girls is founced from top to toe,
 And that's the hull o' what they know.
 The men is mad on bonds an' stocks,
 Swearin' an' shootin' an' pickin' locks,
 I'm real afraid I'll be hanged myself,
 Ef I ain't laid on my final shelf.
 There ain't a cretur but knows to-day,
 I never was lunatic any way.
 But since crazy folks all go free,
 I'm dreadful afraid they'll hang on me!
 There's another thing that's pesky hard—
 I can't stand a neighbor's yard.
 To say, 'How be you?' or borry a pin,
 But what the paper'll have it in:
 'We're pleased to say the Widder Greene
 Took dinner a Tuesday with Mrs. Keene,
 Or, 'Our worthy friend Mrs. Greene's gone
 Down to Barkhamstead to see her son.
 Greet Jerusalem! can't I stir
 Without a raisin' some feller's fur?
 There ain't no privacy, so to say,
 No more than if this was Judgment Day.
 And as for meetin'—I want to swear
 Every time I put my head in there:
 Why, even 'Old Hundred's spiled and done
 Like everything else under the sun;
 It used to be so solemn and slow,
 'Praise to the Lord from men below;
 Now it goes like a gallop'n' steer,
 High diddle diddle! there and here.
 No respect to the Lord above
 No more'n ef He was hand and glove
 With all the creturs he ever made,
 And all the jies that ever was played.
 Preachin' into a neighbor's yard—
 But I tell you what! I'd like it some
 If good old Parson Nathan Strong
 Out o' his grave would come along,
 An' give us a stirrin' taste o' fire—
 Judgement an' justice is my desire,
 Tain't all love an' sickish sweet
 That makes this world o' t'other complete.
 But law! I'm old! I'd better be dead
 When the world's a turnin' over my head;
 Spirits talkin' like farnal fools,
 Bibles kicked out of destrict schools,
 Crazy creturs a-murderin' round—
 Honest folks better be under the ground.
 So fare-yew-well! this airtly scene
 No more'll be pestered by Widder Greene."

THE MARCHIONESS OF MURI

Poisoning as a Fine Art

 three years, and, as the excitement
 duced by her flight had subsided,
 her poisonings ceased to be talked of thought she might venture upon the

resolved to disguise himself as a pri-
and so procure access to the cloister
the intent to gain an interview with criminal recluse. He succeeded. In-sible of her amorous disposition and tense womanliness, he told her that was a Frenchman, a Parisian, in fact that he had seen her a number of times
at home without knowing who she was.
He had heard much of her beauty and misfortunes, and had become interested in them, and, accident-learning that she was in Liege when happened to be passing through town, he had been unable to resist temptation to make an effort to express in person his admiration for and sympathy for her. Now that he had recog-ized her as the handsome stranger
Paris, he confessed his love for her had found that his instincts and his
were united; would she not bid him hope? He so earnestly eloquently pleaded his suit that, if she had had any preconception from the first, it was entirely moyed. He flattered her delightfully and so cunningly appealed to her emotional nature that she acceded at
to a rendezvous beyond the walls, where liberty would be love, and nature.
She kept her appointment faithfully,
advanced toward him eagerly. Streing out his arms to her, he called "darling" and, encircling her in his brace, slipped manacles upon her wrists forced her into a close carriage and for the occasion, and, in company with two other policemen, drove her away, mingled astonishment, dismay and in-nation.

Among her papers was found a general declaration in autograph (many would seem determined to preserve the evidence of their own sins, and the more indubitable it is the firmer their determina-appears), in which she admitted that innocence ended when she was six-years old; that she had burned a hot
that she had poisoned her father,
brother, her maid, one of her children
and herself; that she had, in short, attended herself in crime. Her declaration regarded as a confession, though she strenuously maintained that it was mere literary exercise, part of a romance
had once thought of writing in auto-graphic form. It was useful, nevertheless,
as testimony which, with the circumstances already mentioned, was overwhelming.
After she had been taken to Paris,
her arrest had become generally known
the curiosity, interest, and excitement

The trial of the marchioness soon took place. Despite the superabundant evidence, she still protested her innocence until, sentenced to the torture, she unbosomed herself at once, avowing so many and such frightful crimes as had never been imagined; some of them too repulsive and hideous to be recounted. She had a long conference with the procureur-general, the nature of which was not divulged, owing, as was believed, to the direct implication of prominent nobles and officials. Her husband, who had been indifferent to her when he had believed her only disloyal and ordinarily wicked, was fascinated anew, after he had learned what a monster she really was. Possibly his love returned through his suspicion of her persevering efforts to poison him. May not the heart of man be touched and subdued by the woman who, he knows, is intent upon his murder? Can a certain sense of deserved death infutinate him with her who is anxious to cause it? Whatever the reason, the Marquis, after his wife's arrest, made heaven and earth to prevent her imprisonment. He was connected with many of the best families of the kingdom, and he strained his influence to the utmost in her behalf. But she was pronounced guilty by the Superior Criminal Court and sentenced (July 16, 1676) to be drawn on a hurdle, in her chemise, her feet bound by a rope about her neck, a burning torch held in her hand, to the church of Notre-Dame where she must beg for pardon before the people; then to be taken to the Place de Greve, and there to be beheaded after which her body was to be given to the flames, and her ashes scattered to the winds.

Widder Greene's Last Words.

"I'm goin' to die," says the Widder Greene, "I'm goin' to quit this airthly scene; It ain't no place for me to stay, In such a world as't is to-day. Such works and ways is too much for me, Nobody can't let nobody be. The girls is founced from top to toe, And that's the hull o' what they know, The men is mad on bonds an' stocks, Swearin' an' shootin' an' pickin' locks, I'm real afraid I'll be hanged myself, If I ain't laid on my final shelf. There ain't a cretur but knows to-day, I never was lunatic any way, But since crazy folks all go free, I'm dreadful afraid they'll hang on me! There's another thing that's pesky hard—I can't go into a neighbor's yard To say, 'How be you?' or borry a pin, But what the paper'll have it in: 'We're pleased to say the Widder Greene Took dinner a Tuesday with Mrs. Keene, Or, 'Our worthy friend Mrs. Greene's gone Down to Barkhamstead to see her son.' 'Orrer Jerusalem! I can't I stir Without a 'raisin' some feller's fur? There ain't no privacy, so to say, No more than if this was Judgment Day. And as for meetin'—I want to swear Every time I put my head in there: Why, even 'Old Hundred's spiled and done. Like everything else under the sun; It used to be so solemn and slow, 'Praise to the Lord from men below; Now it goes like a gallopin' steer, High diddle diddle I there and here. No respect to the Lord above No more'n ef He was hand and glove With all the creturs he ever made, And all the jigs that ever was played. Preachin' too—but here I'm dumb— But I tell you what! I'd like it some If good old Pars'n Nathan Strong Out o' his grave would come along, An' give us a stirrin' taste o' fire— Judgment an' justice is my desire, 'Tain't all love an' sickish sweet That makes this world or t'other complete. But law! I'm old! So fare-yew-well! this airthly scene No more'll be pestered by Widder Greene."

THE MARCHIONESS OF MURDER.

Poisoning as a Fine Art.

CHAPTER III.

The marchioness remained in England three years, and, as the excitement induced by her flight had subsided, and her poisonings ceased to be talked of, she thought she might venture upon the Continent. She secretly crossed the channel, therefore, to Flanders, and, proceeding to Liege, entered a convent, where she believed she would be entirely safe. The French authorities had not lost sight of her, however; they had watched her movements at a distance; and she had not been in Liege a week before they were aware of it. A convent was a sanctuary, no one taking refuge there could be arrested. But arrangements were made with the municipality of the city by which she could be apprehended there. The affair was specially intrusted to one Desgrais, a very shrewd, intelligent, and handsome agent of police, who quitted Paris with several other minions of the law. His object was to get the marchioness beyond the conventual lim-

She received her sentence unmoved, with apparent unconcern. From the day of her seizure she had shown perfect courage, and had resumed her devotion. Still, she shrank, woman-like, from the ghastly display which her execution compelled. Albeit she believed that her sentence would not be carried out, she tried several times to commit suicide in prison, and never surrendered hope until she was mounting the scaffold. Even then the bitter disappointment did not reveal itself. She smiled as she ascended, unaided, and said, "Now this seems to be really in earnest."

It was about six o'clock, of a delightful evening, that the marchioness was taken to the block. She was perfectly calm, self-possessed, even cheerful. Reduced to a single garment, she had no scope for making a last effective toilet—dear to every French woman's heart—no opportunity to die with her hair becomingly dressed, in an admirably-fitting gown, exhaling the aroma of the latest fashion. And yet, in spite of these new, negative terrors of death, she was unblanched, and looked lovely. Though about forty she had not lost her beauty, and the occasion could not fail to render her interesting. Her face, always sweet and innocent in expression, seemed sweeter and more innocent than ever. Her rich hair, fine as floss, fell in ripples of flashing light over her smooth white shoulders, and her eyes shone with a strange and winning lustre. Her bare feet, exquisitely shaped, and the admirable proportions of her diminutive figure, were clearly visible as she was drawn along. She was compared to Correggio's "Reading Magdalen," and thousands of eyes were riveted upon her. "She looks like a beautiful child," said one; "She is an angel!" said another; "She cannot be guilty with that lovely face," cried a third; and so she ran the gantlet of admiration and criticism until the axe closed the harrowing spectacle. Having recognized, on the way, certain ladies of distinction, who were unseemly in their desire to get a glimpse at her, she rebuked them with the words, "This is truly a charming sight to see!" and her ripe lips curled in supreme scorn.

All Paris, rich and poor, the cultured and the ignorant, the great and the vulgar, were gathered along the quays of the Seine to witness the dismal show. Artists were there, Le Brun among the rest, to sketch her features, to judge of the human physiognomy before the vision of death. They were all disappointed. They beheld nothing but a very small, graceful, handsome woman, half-nude, serene, stoical, exposed to a vast, curious crowd, to which she seemed infinitely superior. Madame Sevigne, who has described the scene, was on the Notre-Dame bridge. She says she had never seen such a throng of people of all kinds and conditions; she had never known Paris to be so interested and so affected. Hun-

compounders and venders of the dead drug were almost exclusively Italian, the descendants or followers of those who had come into the country with the precious Jezebel, Catharine de Medic whom the French have pronounced the pioneer of poisoning.

The subtle, undetectable venom which Sainte-Croix and his mistress employ with such terrible effect was the agu Tofana whose chief ingredient, arsenic is very easily discovered by the most modern chemistry. It must have been grim satisfaction to Marguerite de Brinvilliers—if she had any knowledge of the world after her decapitation—to be aware of the diabolical seed she had sown, and of the diabolical harvest her imitators had gathered.

THE END.

"The Irish in Canada."

Mayor Waller of Ottawa, a distinguished Irish Catholic, a few evenings since delivered a lecture on the above subject. It is replete alike with eloquence and common sense. These are Mayor Waller's concluding words of advice to his fellow Catholics:—

"Let us form a knowledge of the aims and objects of political parties, ally ourselves intelligently on the one side or the other, and there firmly remain until we can justify ourselves on broad principle for a change. Let us help ourselves in every way, not merely in the country but for the country. Let our young men, as it is their right and privilege, and they owe it to this their native country, become members of our volunteer corps and to enjoy the several advantages that arise from such an act. Let them, instead of wasting valuable time in bowling alleys or billiard rooms, seek more frequently library associations, and the public journals of the day, and works of history, literature and science. Let them join our Reform or Conservative Clubs according to their convictions, and take an interest in their concerns. Let them become members of the Boards of Trade in their respective localities, and bear there to debate matters of interest to the country, and in this way not only educate themselves politically but familiarize themselves to speak on public questions, and in doing this they break down the barrier of exclusiveness, exhibit their natural abilities, and thus certainly pay the way to their preferment to higher stations in life. Here in Canada we have the finest, the freest country in the world. Here we are invested with a measure of freedom and liberty beyond which I would not be in the interest of the State or the subject to be endowed. Her peace reigns supreme, and prosperity smiles on the labors of the sober and industrious. Our climate is healthful and invigorating, our resources almost inexhaustible requiring only development to make us a great and powerful

The affair was specially intrusted to one Desgrais, a very shrewd, intelligent, and handsome agent of police, who quitted Paris with several other minions of the law. His object was to get the marchioness beyond the conventual limits, and he spent weeks in forming plans to this end. They all failed. At last, he resolved to disguise himself as a priest, and so procure access to the cloister with the intent to gain an interview with the criminal recluse. He succeeded. Sensible of her amorous disposition and intense womanliness, he told her that he was a Frenchman, a Parisian, in fact; that he had seen her a number of times at home without knowing who she might be. He had heard much of her beauty and misfortunes, and had become deeply interested in them, and, accidentally learning that she was in Liege when he happened to be passing through the town, he had been unable to resist the temptation to make an effort to express in person his admiration for and sympathy with her. Now that he had recognized her as the handsome stranger of Paris, he confessed his love for her; he had found that his instincts and his fate were united; would she not bid him hope? He so earnestly eloquently pleaded his suit that, if she had had any suspicion from the first, it was entirely removed. He flattered her delightfully, and so cunningly appealed to her emotional nature that she acceded at last to a rendezvous beyond the walls, where liberty would be love, and nature law. She kept her appointment faithfully. She advanced toward him eagerly. Stretching out his arms to her, he called her "darling," and, encircling her in his embrace, slipped manacles upon her wrists, forced her into a close carriage ordered for the occasion, and, in company with two other policemen, drove her away in mingled astonishment, dismay and indignation.

Among her papers was found a general declaration in autograph (many women seem determined to preserve the evidence of their own sins, and the more indubitable it is the firmer their determination appears), in which she admitted that her innocence ended when she was seven years old; that she had burned a house; that she had poisoned her father, her brother, her maid, one of her children, and herself; that she had, in short, steeped herself in crime. All Paris, rich and poor, the cultured and the ignorant, the great and the vulgar, were gathered along the quays of the Seine to witness the dismal show. Artists were there, Le Brun among the rest, to sketch her features, to judge of the human physiognomy before the vision of death. They were all disappointed. They beheld nothing but a very small, graceful, handsome woman, half-nude, serene, stoical, exposed to a vast, curious crowd, to which she seemed infinitely superior. Madame Sevigne, who has described the scene, was on the Notre-Dame bridge. She says she had never seen such a throng of people of all kinds and conditions; she had never known Paris to be so interested and so affected. Hundreds who had declared no punishment severe enough for her, were so moved by her looks and deportment, her courage and resignation, that they pitied and praised her; were ready to risk their lives in an attempt to rescue her from the clutches of the law. Popular feeling, always so shifting and incalculable, had totally changed. They who would have torn her to pieces a month before, were ready to fall down and kiss her feet, to worship her as a martyr! Profligate courtiers prayed for her; women of the highest rank gazed at her through blinding tears.

The marchioness, as the hurdle neared the cathedral—the executioner on one side of her, and her confessor on the other—began the latter to place himself before her, that she might not see that rascal Desgrais (he stood at a little distance in front of her), who had so basely entrapped her. She was a Gaul to her inmost fibre. She could deliberately murder her brothers, her father, her own child; she could poison poor patients in the hospital while they blessed her for her charity; but she would not and could not pardon the man who had betrayed her in the name of love. Not the betrayal, but the means of its accomplishment rendered the offense unyenial. "That wretch," she had often said, "I shall never forgive in this world or the next; and I am sure that God will not forgive him either." The Parisians also felt incensed against the agent of the police. For a long while after the execution he kept himself concealed, if he had stirred out alone, there is little doubt that he would have been killed by some of the populace, infuriated against him for his treachery.

Having mounted the scaffold, the charming little demon calmly surveyed the mighty concourse; glanced up and down the turbid river, at the towers of Notre-Dame, and at the sun sinking, like her own life, in crimson fullness, but not so fast. It had thirty minutes to burn; she barely fifteen. And these were ignominiously used by the executioner in exhibiting her, in different positions, to the crowd, under pretence of arranging most conveniently for her last moment. A flush in her cheek told that she felt the indignity; but she merely said, "It takes a long while to cut off so small a head as mine." A minute later she had her head upon the block with a disdainful smile; the axe fell; an involuntary groan burst from the multitude, and when the head was picked up, the disdainful smile was still upon the bloody, lifeless face.

Then her body was burned, and the people hugged the spot far beyond the night, long after the last flame had expired, weeping around the ashes until

for a change. Let us help ourselves in every way, not merely in the country but for the country. Our climate is healthful and invigorating, our resources almost inexhaustible requiring only development to make us a great and powerful nation. Let us all, as the people of a common country, then join harmoniously together to develop those grand resources of this Canada of ours and contentedly enjoy the blessings to result from our labors. Let us, in the words of his Grace Archbishop Lynch, for whose sentiments we all entertain a profound respect, and by whose excellent advice we can all safely be governed, 'shoulder to shoulder to build up this our country with a generous loyalty, without forgetting the land of our birth, and under such happy auspices it will become a great nation in the future, great is the morality of its people, and that eminent prosperity and contentment which God bestows on dutiful subjects.'

Charles Reade and the Women Doctors

Charles Reade's clever and manly chapter on the woman doctors in Edinburgh so pleased divers students of the Women's Medical College in New York, that last winter they wrote him a letter of thanks. He has replied in the following characteristic note:

"My Dear Young Ladies:—Nothing in the way of comment on my labors has given me so much pleasure as the encouraging words Miss White has been good enough to pen me, and I have done me the honor to indorse. It is very generous of you; for in your own persons you owe me nothing; your battle is won without my help. The female students of America have encountered opposition in every form, but have conquered, thanks to their own fortitude, and the character of their nation, which is too brave, chivalrous and just to persist in siding with the strong against the weak, and with cliques against a sex. If it is not so. Your English sisters are far fewer in number, and inferior in ability and courage, and their foes are pig-headed beyond belief. Our medical women need a champion. Were I twenty years younger, I think I could fight their battle out for them. But my age, and an intermittent but chronic and most exhausting cough, have made me less able to sustain long strife than I used to be. Nevertheless, I assure you that on reading your kind missive I felt your young blood glow in my veins, and that I could die, like Macbeth, with 'harness on my back,' or like Sampson himself, in the very act of pulling down some stronghold of time-honored iniquity. I now take the privilege of my age, and send you my love, as well as my esteem and sympathy, and wish you, with all my heart health, happiness, and success, and the just respect of your fellow citizens. I am Miss White and ladies your very capital was burning to see her, to learn anything and everything about her. She was for weeks and months the absorbing topic of gossip and discussion; she was the criminal lionne of the town; every bit of rumor and information was snapped up eagerly and passed from mouth

to mouth, growing as it went.

The trial of the marchioness soon took place. Despite the superabundant evidence, she still protested her innocence
until, sentenced to the torture, she unbosomed herself at once, avowing so many and such frightful crimes as had never been imagined; some of them too repulsive and hideous to be recounted. She had a long conference with the procureur-general, the nature of which was not disclosed, owing, as was believed, to the direct implication of prominent nobles and officials. Her husband, who had been indifferent to her when he had believed her only disloyal and ordinarily wicked, was fascinated anew, after he had learned what a monster she really was. Possibly his love returned through his suspicion of her persevering efforts to poison him. May not the heart of man be touched and subdued by the woman who, he knows, is intent upon his murder?
Can a certain sense of deserving death infatuate him with her who is anxious to cause it? Whatever the reason, the Marquis, after his wife's arrest, moved heaven and earth to prevent her punishment. He was connected with many of the best families of the kingdom, and he strained his influence to the utmost
in her behalf. But she was pronounced guilty by the Superior Criminal Court,
and sentenced (July 16, 1676) to be drawn
on a hurdle, in her chemise, her feet bare,
a rope about her neck, a burning torch in her hand, to the church of Notre-Dame,
where she must beg for pardon before all the people; then to be taken to the Place
de Greve, and there to be beheaded;
after which her body was to be given to the flames, and her ashes scattered to the winds.

side of her, and her confessor on the other—beggd the latter to place himself
before her, that she might not see that rascal Desgrais (he stood at a little distance in front of her), who had so basely entrapped her. She was a Gaul to her innest fibre. She could deliberately murder her brothers, her father, her own child; she could poison poor patients in the hospital while they blessed her for her charity; but she would not and could not pardon the man who had betrayed
her in the name of love. Not the betrayal, but the means of its accomplishment rendered the offense unyenial. "That wretch," she had often said; "I shall never forgive in this world or the next;
and I am sure that God will not forgive him either." The Parisians also felt incensed against the agent of the police.
For a long while after the execution he kept himself concealed. If he had stirred up alone, there is little doubt that he would have been killed by some of the populace, infuriated against him for his treachery.

Having mounted the scaffold, the charming little demon calmly surveyed the mighty concourse; glanced up and down the turbid river, at the towers of Notre-Dame, and at the sun sinking, like her own life, in crimson fullness, but not so fast. It had thirty minutes to burn;
she barely fifteen. And these were ignominiously used by the executioner in exhibiting her, in different positions, to the crowd, under pretense of arranging most conveniently for her last moment. A flush in her cheek told that she felt the indignity; but she merely said, "It takes a long while to cut off so small a head as mine." A minute later she had her head upon the block with a disdainful smile;
the axe fell; an involuntary groan burst
from the multitude, and when the head was picked up, the disdainful smile was still upon the bloody, lifeless face.

Then her body was burned, and the people lunged the spot far beyond the night, long after the last flame had expired; groping among the embers until morning came and noon, and evening
succeeded, to find a fragment of her bones,
and gathering up what they thought to be her ashes as sacred relics. They considered her a martyr and a saint; they believed that her ashes had power to cure
diseases, prevent sin, and ward off evil.
Those who found nothing, expected nothing,
went to the Place de Greve day after day, imagining that the spirit of the marchioness was in the air, and that they should be blest by breathing the same atmosphere in which she had perished.

After the death of Sainte-Croix, and the seizure of his casket, the ablest physicians and chemists of Paris, though they knew the packets he had left to contain poison, had not the skill to determine its nature. They spent weeks and months in trying to do so, but were compelled at last to acknowledge their ignorance. They made an elaborate report in which they declared that the Brinvilliers poison, as they termed it, exceeded all tests; that it went beyond the knowledge of medicine and science, and defied discovery. It floated on water; it could not be detected by fire; in the bodies of animals it concealed itself so cunningly
that no analysis could disclose its presence. While it tapped the source of life, it left every part of the animal substance natural and healthy in appearance; and yet all poisons known to the faculty could be traced by unmistakable signs.

What an encouragement to evil-doing
was the publication of that report! Every person in France, desirous to remove any other person who happened to stand in the way of his pleasure, resentment, or interest, was informed thereby that he could make such removal with impunity.
The inheritance-powders were sold in all the leading cities of the kingdom, and it is estimated that, during the ten years
following the flight of Madame de Brinvilliers, twenty thousand Frenchmen were poisoned! For a good while the sentiment which God bestows on human subjects."

Charles Reade and the Women Doctors

Charles Reade's clever and manly chapter on the woman doctors in Edinburgh
so pleased divers students of the Womens Medical College in New York, that last winter they wrote him a letter of thanks.
He has replied in the following characteristic note:

"My Dear Young Ladies:—Nothing in the way of comment on my labors has given me so much pleasure as the encouraging words Miss White has been good enough to pen me, and you have done me the honor to indorse. It is very generous of you; for in your own persons
you owe me nothing; your battle is won without my help. The female students of America have encountered opposition
in every form, but have conquered, thanks
to their own fortitude, and the character
of their nation, which is too brave, chivalrous
and just to persist in siding with the strong against the weak, and with cliques against a sex. Here it is not so. Your English sisters are far fewer in number, and inferior in ability and courage, and their foes are pig-headed beyond belief. Our medical women need a champion. Were I twenty years younger, I think I could fight their battle out for them. But my age, and an intermittent but chronic and most exhausting cough, have made me less able to sustain long strife than I used to be.
Nevertheless, I assure you that on receiving your kind missive I felt your young blood glow in my veins, and that I could die, like Macbeth, with 'harness on my back,' or like Sampson himself, in the very act of pulling down some stronghold of time-honored iniquity. I now take the privilege of my age, and send you my love, as well as my esteem and sympathy, and wish you, with all my heart,
health, happiness, and success, and the just respect of your fellow citizens. I am Miss White and ladies your very faithful servant, CHARLES READE."

An Eccentric Nobleman.

The earl of Duiley is a British noble
man, who, if he were not a British nobleman would be extremely apt to be adjudged a lunatic. His eccentricities are as incomputable as his income, and London society never has the least idea what he will do next. Some years ago he amused himself by sending out invitations to a ball at his mansion, in three colors—pink, white and crimson. As the guests arrived they were shown into different parts of the building, and the result was that before the evening was far advanced his lordship was discovered to have sent white cards to all the women of the world about whom scandal had never whispered a word, pink cards to all those about whom scandal had succeeded in raising doubts, and crimson cards to all those about whom scandal had left no body room to entertain any doubts at all.
It may be imagined how popular the Earl
was made by the ingenious proceeding.
His latest freak was performed the other day. He determined to give a ball, and issued invitations upon vast gilt cards.
A few days before the festivity a lady who had been honored with one of these cards received a letter from him informing her that he had seen her somewhere
in dark apparel, and that she must either lay aside her mourning or deny herself
the pleasure of attending his ball. The lady in question enthusiastically accepted
the latter alternative. On the morning of the ball another lady, who had been the recipient of one of the gilt cards, received a letter to the same effect, written, not by the Earl himself, but by his private secretary.

Lanigan's Ball.

In the town of Pa Sueur ther lived one Johnny Lanigan. Strictly speaking his name was neither Johanie nor yet Lanigan, but as it is not necessary that he should suffer in his feelings as well as in his stomach, he shall be here described under the name of the famous dweller in the town of Athlone whose unholo fondness for worldly amusements has been warningly set forth in one of Dr. Watts' divine and moral songs.

This pseudo Lanigan was a young man of twenty-two years of age, with an unlimited belief in his own comic powers and a tender attachment for a local young lady. He was accustomed to call upon her at least four evenings in the week, and to entertain her with his brilliant conversation from seven till eleven o'clock. The young lady was timid and gentle. She disliked scenes of violence and humour, but she could not bear to treat an alleged fellow being with unkindness. Besides Mr. Lanigan was the son of a leading citizen, and possessed the one redeeming virtue of caramels—a supply of which he always carried in one of his pockets. It is believed that at heart he was not a bad young man. At any rate, he had never committed any crime of which the law could take cognizance, and was free from the ordinary vice of other young men. The one loathsome vice of habitual humour may, however, have left no room for the acquirement and exercise of such minor vices as drunkenness and larceny, and hence it seems hardly fair to praise him because he never made a call while in a state of intoxication nor stole the portable property of his acquaintances. All the inhabitants of La Suenr with a distinction of age or sex, agree that he was a confirmed humourist of the most exasperating type. When spending the evening with the object of his adoration, he would constantly ask, "when is a jar not a door ?" and insist that the young lady should give it up and let him furnish the answer. He also had a habit of remarking, in an apparently careless way, that it was "a good day for the race ;" and when the young lady, out of her vast charity, would ask "what race?" he would triumphantly answer, "the human race ! ha ! ha !" Four consecutive hours of this sort of thing, repeated four times a week, began to tell upon the unhappy young woman's constitution with terrible effect, and at her entreaty several of her friends made a point of rallying to her support when they knew that she was undergoing Mr. Lanigan's jokes, and undertook to save her from solitary misery by sitting with her until eleven o'clock. This well-meant assistance nevertheless failed to be of any real service. Encouraged by a larger audience than usual, Mr. Lanigan opened fresh stores of humour, and culminated his criminal career by displays of amateur ventriloquism. When he asked the imaginary old man concealed in the chimney what he was doing up there, or held idiotic conversations with pretended Peters concealed under the sofa, or quarrelled with a hypothetical Irishman in the closet, he cast a gloom over the entire community. What was at first only a fiendish outrage upon an unprotected girl became an attack upon the peace and sanity of the village of La Suenr, and at last the young lady felt that the time for endurance was past, and that duty to herself and her friends required her to suppress Mr. Lanigan at any cost.

received her sentence unmoved, apparent unconcern. From the day of seizure she had shown perfect courage and had resumed her devotion. Still, frank, woman-like, from the ghastly way which her execution compelled, it she believed that her sentence did not be carried out, she tried severances to commit suicide in prison, and surrendered hope until she was nting the scaffold. Even then the disappointment did not reveal. She smiled as she ascended, un-, and said, "Now this seems to be y in earnest."

The subtle, undetectable venom which Sainte-Croix and his mistress employed with such terrible effect was the acqua Tofana whose chief ingredient, arsenic, is very easily discovered by the more modern chemistry. It must have been a grim satisfaction to Marguerite de Brinvilliers—if she had any knowledge of this world after her decapitation—to be aware of the diabolical seed she had sown, and of the diabolical harvest her imitators had gathered.

THE END.

"The Irish in Canada."

Mayor Waller of Ottawa, a distinguished Irish Catholic, a few evenings since delivered a lecture on the above subject. It is replete alike with eloquence and common sense. These are Mayor Waller's concluding words of advice to his fellow Catholics :—

"Let us form a knowledge of the aims and objects of political parties, ally ourselves intelligently on the one side or the other, and there firmly remain, until we can justify ourselves on broad principles for a change. Let us help ourselves in every way, not merely in the country but for the country. Let our young men—as it is their right and privilege, and as they owe it to this their native country—become members of our volunteer corps, and to enjoy the several advantages to arise from such an act. Let them, instead of wasting valuable time in bowling alleys or billiard rooms, seek more frequently library associations, and the public journals of the day, and works on history, literature and science. Let them join our Reform or Conservative Clubs, according to their convictions, and take an interest in their concerns. Let them become members of the Boards of Trade in their respective localities, and learn there to debate matters of interest to the country, and in this way not only educate themselves politically but familiarize themselves to speak on public questions, and in doing this they break down the barrier of exclusiveness, exhibit their natural abilities, and thus certainly pave the way to their preferment to higher stations in life. Here in Canada we have the finest, the freest country in the world. Here we are invested with a measure of freedom and liberty beyond which it would not be in the interest of the State or the subject to be endowed. Here peace reigns supreme, and prosperity smiles on the labors of the sober and industrious. Our climate is healthful and invigorating, our resources almost inexhaustible requiring only development to make us a great and powerful nation. Let us all, as the people of a

"Sunday" Vs. "Sabbath."

The Rev. Mr. Haweis, of St. James chapel, Marylebone, a well known Metropolitan minister, actively identified with various philanthropical societies in London, and a prominent supporter of the Charity Organization Society, writing to the Echo on the Sunday opening of museums, etc., thinks the "Sunday" v. "Sabbath" question may fairly be started as follows :—

"While Christians have never been able to convert the Jews, the Jews have converted most Christians to the Sabbatical observation of the Lord's Day—but, in fact, the rules of the Sabbath have never been authoritatively transferred to the Lord's Day—not by Christ, who declared that even the rigid Sabbath was made for man and therefore should not be used to hinder or mar his development; not by the Apostles, who told people that they might do as they pleased (Romans xiv. 5, 6.) forbade a superstitious observance (Galatians iv. 10, 11), and declared the Sabbath abolished (Colossians ii. 16); not by the Bishops and Fathers of the Church, who, like St. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem in the fourth century, forbade the observance of the Sabbath Day, or St. Jerome, who, in describing the Lord's Day, expressly mentions that Christians were free to work after church hours if they pleased; not by the Church Councils, more than one of which contains strictures on the Sabbatical rule; not by Luther in Germany, upon whom the 'Sabbath' rule seemed to act like a red flag, and who ordered his disciples to work, to ride, to feast—to do anything on Sunday rather than set the Lord's Day on a Jewish foundation; not by Calvin, who played bowls on Sunday; not even by old Simon, who said, although he was strict himself, he did not wish to impose his rules on other people; and lastly, not by anyone who reads his Bible with common intelligence. The first Christians, still under Jewish influence, kept both seventh and first day, but never confounded the Sabbath with Sunday. That was left for some of the Reformers, who—when so many Roman Catholic feasts and festivals were swept away—sought to prop up the Sunday as a day of rest with the Fourth Commandment; and, later on the Puritans rivetted the sophism which has proved a burden too heavy for us or our fathers to bear. Let us state it fairly, then—Sunday is the Christian's Day of free worship, rest, refreshment, and recreation; it is an institution analogous to, but not identical with the Sabbath; and it is of Scriptural indication and of Apostolical precedent. Let us then have done, once for all, with the Scriptural argument, together with all this confusion about what may not be done on Sunday, and let us make up our minds that—as long as we conform to certain positive duties, such as rest and refreshment for body, mind, and spirit, not neglecting the assembling of ourselves together for worship, nor those acts of abstinence which the followers of St.

figure, were clearly visible as she was drawn along. She was compared to Correggio's "Reading Magdalen," and thousands of eyes were riveted upon "She looks like a beautiful child," and "She is an angel!" said another. "She cannot be guilty with that face," cried a third; and so she was a gauntlet of admiration and criticism until the axe closed the harrowing tale. Having recognized, on the certain ladies of distinction, who inhumanly in their desire to get a seat at her, she rebuked them with words, "This is truly a charming scene to see!" and her ripe lips curled in a scorn.

Paris, rich and poor, the cultured and ignorant, the great and the vulgar, gathered along the quays of the Seine to witness the dismal show. Artists here, Le Brun among the rest, to her features, to judge of the physiognomy before the vision of the guillotine. They were all disappointed. They beheld nothing but a very small, plump, handsome woman, half-nude, exposed to a vast, curious crowd, to which she seemed infinitely small. Madame Sevigne, who has described the scene, was on the Notre-Dame. She says she had never seen a more throng of people of all kinds and ages; she had never known Paris so interested and so affected. Hitherto she had declared no punishment enough for her, were so moved by her looks and deportment, her courage and resignation, that they pitied and loved her; were ready to risk their lives in an attempt to rescue her from the hands of the law. Popular feeling, so shifting and incalculable, had changed. They who would have torn her to pieces a month before, were to fall down and kiss her feet, to praise her as a martyr! Profligate courtiers gazed at her; women of the high

gentry, as the hurdle neared the guillotine—the executioner on one side, and her confessor on the other—began to place themselves before her, that she might not see that Desgrais (he stood at a little distance in front of her), who had so basely betrayed her. She was a Gaul to her people. She could deliberately betray her brothers, her father, her own self; she could poison poor patients in the hospital while they blessed her for her charity; but she would not and could not betray the man who had betrayed the name of Loye. Not the betrayal of the means of its accomplishment, but the offense unyenial. "That," she had often said, "I shall forgive in this world or the next; but I am sure that God will not forgive her!" The Parisians also felt in-against the agent of the police—long while after the execution he himself concealed. If he had stirred up, there is little doubt that he would have been killed by some of the crowd, infuriated against him for his crime. He mounted the scaffold, the little demon calmly surveyed the ghastly concourse; glanced up and heaved a sigh, at the towers of Notre-Dame, and at the sun sinking, like a life in crimson fullness, but not a word. It had thirty minutes to burn; and these were ignorantly used by the executioner in exchange, in different positions, to the under pretense of arranging most decently for her last moment. As her cheek told that she felt the heat; but she merely said, "It takes while to get off so small a heat as this." A minute later she laid her head back with a disdainful smile; she fell; an involuntary groan burst from the multitude, and when the head rolled up, the disdainful smile was on the bloody, lifeless face. Her body was burned, and the huggled the spot far beyond the long after the last flame had extinguished among the embers until came and noon, and evening fell, to find a fragment of her bones,

Let us, in the words of his Grace Archbishop Lynch, for whose sentiments we all entertain a profound respect, and by whose excellent advice we can all safely be governed, "shoulder to shoulder to build up this our country with a generous loyalty, without forgetting the land of our birth, and under such happy auspices it will become a great nation in the future, great is the morality of its people, and that eminent prosperity and contentment which God bestows on dutiful subjects."

Charles Reade and the Women Doctors

Charles Reade's clever and manly chapter on the woman doctors in Edinburgh so pleased divers students of the Women's Medical College in New York, that last winter they wrote him a letter of thanks. He has replied in the following characteristic note:—"My Dear Young Ladies:—Nothing in the way of comment on my labors has given me so much pleasure as the encouraging words Miss White has been good enough to pen me, and you have done me the honor to indorse. Generally speaking, all recreation which tends to refresh, invigorate, and relieve—without demoralizing—the mind and body is lawful for Christian people under proper restrictions, and highly conducive to the moral progress of the masses, especially athletic sports, music, lectures, readings, excursions, or visits to museums, art collections, and libraries; and the clergy of all denominations ought to use their authority to define in detail, and their influence to obtain for the masses, such wholesome and exhilarating Sunday recreations.

The Morning Dress

The ideal morning dress for women who do their own work is of calico, not so dark as to be gloomy in its suggestions, not so light as to show every spot that may happen to soil it. It is simply but tastefully made, so that laundering it will not be difficult or tedious, and so that it will not be too nice to wear every day. "When anybody knocks at our door," said a wealthy farmer, "all the women folk run and hide; they don't want to be seen with their old clothes on." They were sensible women, too, to run and hide. No one who saw them neatly attired in their afternoon dresses could have believed that such "nice" women had been around the house all the morning in old, worn, dirty, spotted, highly trimmed cashmeres and merinos, with unkempt hair, with no collars about their necks, and looking like anything else than ladies, as they prided themselves on being. For kitchen wear nothing is so unsuitable as woollen goods. They absorb and retain odors, and as they cannot easily be cleansed, they are unhealthy for the wearer and untidy. With calico at six and ten cents a yard, there are few women who cannot afford to dress neatly and tastefully, even while they are about their work. The lessons of fitness thus taught are of great value to children, and the comfort of the house in seeing the mistress of the house always respectable, as she should be, is not of small degree. In this as in other things, very much depends on a habit, and a habit once formed in early life is not easily broken. We commend these few suggestions to daughters as earnestly as to their mothers.

a habit of remarking, in an apparently careless way, that it was "a good day for the race," and when the young lady, out of her vast charity, would ask "what race?" he would triumphantly answer, "the human race / ha! ha!" Four consecutive hours of this sort of thing, repeated four times a week, began to tell upon the unhappy young woman's constitution with terrible effect, and at her entreaty several of her friends made a point of rallying to her support when they knew that she was undergoing Mr. Lanigan's jokes, and undertook to save her from solitary misery by sitting with her until eleven o'clock. This well-meant assistance nevertheless failed to be of any real service. Encouraged by a larger audience than usual, Mr. Lanigan opened fresh stores of humour, and culminated his criminal career by displays of amateur ventriloquism. When he asked the imaginary old man concealed in the chimney what he was doing up there, or held idiotic conversations with pretended Peters concealed under the sofa, or quarrelled with a hypothetical Irishman in the closet, he cast a gloom over the entire community. What was at first only a fiendish outrage upon an unprotected girl became an attack upon the peace and sanity of the village of La Sœur, and at last the young lady felt that the time for endurance was past, and that duty to herself and her friends required her to suppress Mr. Lanigan at any cost.

On Wednesday last the young lady in question gave a birthday party. All the young men and young women of La Sœur were invited, and six small boys were kept constantly at work stirring ice-cream in the back-yard for hours previous to the party. When the guests assembled Mr. Lanigan was, of course in the midst of them, for public sentiment had not yet been educated up to the point of making an otherwise unoffending humorist a social outlaw. Besides Mr. Lanigan could waltz, and as waltzing was a rare accomplishment among the youth of La Sœur, his absence from the party would have actually grieved two or three young ladies who were so passionately addicted to waltzing that they would doubtless have been willing to waltz even with a member of the Havard eight, provided no young gentleman of waltzing capability could be secured. Of course, the La Sœur humorist was in excellent spirits and overjoyed with fun. He had not been in the house three minutes before the guests were shudderingly aware that he was asking, "Who was the first man mentioned in the Bible?" and waited, with drops of agony bedewing their foreheads, the familiar answer, "Chap. 1." Within the next half hour he held an unusually long conversation with Peter in the cellar, and had caught a pretended fly on the window-pane after fifteen minutes foricious buzzing. By this time the whole company was on the verge of tears, when the ice cream was announced, and the young hostess with her own hands pressed a plate of that soothing compound upon the hilarious humorist.

That plate of ice cream contained morphine, and the drug was swallowed without suspicion by the doomed Lanigan. Fifteen minutes later, or at precisely 15, he was seated in an arm-chair profoundly asleep. The guests recovered their spirits. The hum of conversation was renewed. The dance went on. It seemed as if some awful weight had suddenly been lifted from this company. Had La Sœur been situated in the United States instead of in Canada, it might have been supposed that the Fourth of July had been solemnly abolished by act of Congress in that Dr. Mary Walker, Surgeon Major, and Dr. Talman had simultaneously emigrated to Central Africa.

All would have been well had not an ill-judged attempt to awaken Mr. Lanigan been made about midnight. The attempt was a failure. No amount of knocking or yelling could startle the sleeper in his slumbers. A wild hope that he was actually dead, flushed the cheeks and brought a smile to the lips of more than one of those present, but this hope was dashed by a leading physician, who remarked that a stomach-pump "would fetch him," and therefore went home to iscal Desgrais (he stood at a little distance in front of her), who had so basely trapped her. She was a Gaul to her most fibre. She could deliberately murder her brothers, her father, her own wife; she could poison poor patients in the hospital while they blessed her for her charity; but she would not and could not pardon the man who had betrayed her in the name of love. Not the betrayal, but the means of its accomplishment rendered the offense unvenial. "Thatretch," she had often said, "I shall ever forgive in this world or the next; id I am sure that God will not forgive me either." The Parisians also felt incensed against the agent of the police, or a long while after the execution he put himself concealed. If he had stirred it alone, there is little doubt that he could have been killed by some of the populace, infuriated against him for his eacbery.

Having mounted the scaffold, the arming little demon calmly surveyed the mighty concourse; glanced up and own the turbid river, at the towers of otre-Dame, and at the sun sinking, like r own life, in crimson fullness, but not fast. It had thirty minutes to burn; e barely fifteen. And those were ignominiously used by the executioner in exalting her, in different positions, to the owd, under pretense of arranging most inveniently for her last moment. A ish in her cheek told that she felt the dignity; but she merely said, "It takes long while to cut off so small a head as me." A minute later she laid her head on the block with a disdainful smile; e axe fell; an involuntary groan burst on the multitude, and when the head as picked up, the disdainful smile was ill upon the bloody, lifeless face.

Then her body was burned, and the ople hugged the spot far beyond the ght, long after the last flame had exed; groping among the embers until orning came and noon, and evening ceeded, to find a fragment of her bones, id gathering up what they thought to be r ashes as sacred relics. They considred her a martyr and a saint; they beieved that her ashes had power to cure soases, prevent sin, and ward off evil. ose who found nothing, expected nothing, went to the Place de Greve day after y, imagining that the spirit of the archioness was in the air, and that they ould be blest by breathing the same mosphere in which she had perished.

After the death of Sainte-Croix, and e seizure of his casket, the ablest physicians and chemists of Paris, though ey knew the packets he had left to conin poison, had not the skill to determine its nature. They spent weeks and onths in trying to do so, but were comilled at last to acknowledge their ignorance. They made an elaborate report in hich they declared that the Brinvilliers ison, as they termed it, exceeded all sts; that it went beyond the knowledge of medicine and science, and defied scovery. It floated on water; it could t be detected by fire; in the bodies of imals it concealed itself so cunningly at no analysis could disclose its pvice. While it trapped the source of life, left every part of the animal substance tural and healthy in appearance; and t all poisons known to the faculty could r traced by unmistakable signs.

What an encouragement to evil-doing as the publication of this report! Every person in France, desirous to remove y other person who happened to stand the way of his pleasure, resentment, or terest, was informed thereby that he ould make such removal with impunity. e inheritance-powders were sold in all e leading cities of the kingdom, and it estimated that, during the ten years lowing the flight of Madame de Brinilliers, twenty thousand Frenchmen ere poisoned! For a good while the

Charles Reade's clever and manly chapter on the woman doctors in Edinburgh so pleased divers students of the Womens Medical College in New York, that last winter they wrote him a letter of thanks. He has replied in the following characteristic note:—

"My Dear Young Ladies:—Nothing in the way of comment on my labors has given me so much pleasure as the encouraging words Miss White has been good enough to pen me, and I you have done me the honor to indorse. It is very generous of you; for in your own persons you owe me nothing; your battle is won without my help. The female students of America have encountered opposition in every form, but have conquered, thanks to their own fortitude, and the character of their nation, which is too brave, chivalrous and just to persist in siding with the strong against the weak, and with cliques against a sex. Here it is not so. Your English sisters are far fewer in number, and inferior in ability and courage, and their foes are pig-headed beyond belief. Our medical women need a champion. Were I twenty years younger, I think I could fight their battle out for them. But my age, and an intermittent but chronic and most exhausting cough, have made me less able to sustain long strife than I used to be. Nevertheless, I assure you that on reading your kind missive I felt your young blood glow in my veins, and that I could die, like Macbeth, with 'harness on my back,' or like Sampson himself, in the very act of pulling down some strong hold of time-honored iniquity. I now take the privilege of my age, and send you my love, as well as my esteem and sympathy, and wish you, with all my heart, health, happiness, and success, and the just respect of your fellow citizens. I am Miss White and ladies your very faithful servant, CHARLES READE."

An Eccentric Nobleman.

The earl of Dudley is a British nobleman, who, if he were not a British nobleman would be extremely apt to be adjudged a lunatic. His eccentricities are as incomputable as his income, and London society never has the least idea what he will do next. Some years ago he amused himself by sending out invitations to a ball at his mansion, in three colors—pink, white and crimson. As the guests arrived they were shown into different parts of the building, and the result was that before the evening was far advanced his lordship was discovered to have sent white cards to all the women of the world about whom scandal had never whispered a word, pink cards to all those about whom scandal had succeeded in raising doubts, and crimson cards to all those about whom scandal had left nobody room to entertain any doubts at all. It may be imagined how popular the Earl was made by the ingenious proceeding. His latest freak was performed the other day. He determined to give a ball, and issued invitations upon vast gilt cards. A few days before the festivity a lady who had been honored with one of these cards received a letter from him informing her that he had seen her somewhere in dark apparel, and that she must either lay aside her mourning or deny herself the pleasure of attending his ball. The lady in question enthusiastically accepted the latter alternative. On the morning of the ball another lady, who had been the recipient of one of the gilt cards, received a letter to the same effect, written, not by the Earl himself, but by his private secretary.

fluence to obtain for the masses, such wholesome and exhilarating Sunday recreations."

The Morning Dress.

The ideal morning dress for women who do their own work is of calico, not so dark as to be gloomy in its suggestions, not so light as to show every spot that may happen to soil it. It is simply but tastefully made, so that laundering it will not be difficult or tedious, and so that it will not be too nice to wear every day.

"When anybody knocks at our door," said a wealthy farmer, "all the women folk run and hide; they don't want to be seen with their old clothes on." They were sensible women, too, to run and hide. No one who saw them neatly attired in their afternoon dresses could have believed that such "nice" women had been around the house all the morning in old, worn, dirty, spotted, highly trimmed cashmeres and merinos, with unkempt hair, with no collars about their necks, and looking like anything else than ladies, as they prided themselves on being. For kitchen wear nothing is so unsuitable as woollen goods. They absorb and retain odours, and as they cannot easily be cleaned, they are unhealthful for the wearer and untidy. With calico at six and ten cents a yard, there are few women who cannot afford to dress neatly and tastefully, even while they are about their work. The lessons of fitness thus taught are of great value to children, and the comfort one has in seeing the mistresses of the house always presentable, as she should be, is not of small degree. In this as in other things, very much depends on a habit, and a habit once formed in early life is not easily broken. We commend these few suggestions to daughters as earnestly as to their mothers.

The Unspeakable Turk.

All accounts go to show that the Turkish soldier has not degenerated from his ancestors, who were the terror of Europe in the fifteenth century. For dash in a charge, and for obstinacy of resistance behind intrenchments, the Turks of to-day are probably not surpassed. But, like all Oriental warriors, when repulsed or confused by the loss of a commander, they soon become panic-stricken.

Nor has the Turk lost any of his ferocity. At Damascus, recently, a Turkish soldier went into the bazaar to buy a sword. To try the temper of one he looked around for some object. Just at that moment a Jew happened to pass. In the twinkling of an eye, with a sweeping blow, the soldier cut off the Jew's head, as clean as though done by the axe of the executioner. Then he coolly pronounced the weapon of good steel, paid the price, and went his way. Such soldiers are apt to be as terrible to the people whom they defend as to the enemy.

An Awkward Pause.

A young gentleman undertook to relate a circumstance one Sunday evening, in the presence of some young ladies, and he commenced as follows:

"A lady friend and myself, last evening went to Bed—"

With a sudden spring the old lady bounced him out of the house. The next day the old gentleman met him on the street and asked for an apology.

"I was about to say," commenced the young man, "that a lady friend and myself went to Bed—" when a thrust from the old man's cane started him back several feet, upon which he exclaimed at the top of his voice:

"A lady friend and myself went to Bedford street church, you old fool!"

doubtless have been willing to waltz even with a member of the Harvard eight, provided no young gentleman of waltzing capability could be secured. Of course, the La Sneur humorist was in excellent spirits and overflowed with fun. He had not been in the house three minutes before the guests were shudderingly aware that he was asking, "Who was the first man mentioned in the Bible?" and waited, with drops of agony bedewing their foreheads, the familiar answer, "Chap. 1." Within the next half hour he held an unusually long conversation with Peter in the cellar, and had caught a pretended fly on the window-pane after fifteen minutes of cious buzzing. By this time the whole company was on the verge of tears, when the ice cream was announced, and the young hostess with her own hands pressed a plate of that soothing compound upon the hilarious humourist.

That plate of ice cream contained morphine, and the drug was swallowed without suspicion by the doomed Lanigan. Fifteen minutes later, or at precisely 15, he was seated in an arm-chair profoundly asleep. The guests recovered their spirits. The hum of conversation was renewed. The dance went on. It seemed as if some awful weight had suddenly been lifted from the company. Had La Sneur been situated in the United States instead of in Canada, it might have been supposed that the Fourth of July had been solemnly abolished by act of Congress on that Dr. Mary Walker, Surge, Bates, and Dr. Talmage had simultaneously emigrated to Central Africa.

All would have been well had not an ill judged attempt to awaken Mr. Lanigan been made about midnight. The attempt was a failure. No amount of shaking or yelling could startle the sleeper from his slumbers. A wild hope that he was actually dead, dashed, the cheeks and brought a smile to the lips of more than one of those present, but this hope was dashed by a leading physician, who remarked that a stomach-pump "would fetch him," and therefore went home to procure that instrument in spite of the remonstrances of those who implored him not to disturb the humourist, but to quietly send the undertaker with a coffin and a hearse. Nevertheless, the stomach pump was brought; Mr. Lanigan was carried into the back yard and carefully pumped out. He was then filled with whiskey, in order to counteract the effect of the morphine, and at four o'clock in the morning was sufficiently recovered to be wheeled home in a wheelbarrow. He has since disappeared from La Sneur, and the inhabitants of the neighboring villages are now watching with rifles and pitchforks, lest he should steal among them and disturb some happy home with an unexpected and crushing joke.

This story, while it furnishes a terrible warning to reckless humorists, is especially valuable as a hint to the oppressed. Morphine can be had at any drug store, and a dose large enough for a full-grown humourist costs but a few cents. The stomach-pump need not be used, and indeed should not be. It is said to inflict fearful agonies upon a patient, and the man must indeed be hard-hearted who would pump a slumbering humourist back to life.—New York Times.

"Mamma," asked a resident youngster "Is your old hen going to be sent away for the summer?" "I guess not, my son," she replied; "but why do you ask such a question?" "Because I heard papa tell our new hired girl that they would have such a sweet time when he sent his old hen away for the summer."

"But I pass," said a minister, one Sunday, in dismissing one theme of his subject to take up another. "Then I make it spades," yelled a man from the gallery who was dreaming the happy hours away in an imaginary game of euchre. It is needless to say that he went out on the next deal being assisted by one of the deacons with a full hand of clubs.

THE MONTREAL RIOT.

THE PROCESSION ABANDONED.

Montreal July 11.—The arrangement
arrived at last night, to abandon the idea of an Orange procession and content themselves with merely a sermon in the Church, is generally approved, and the moderate course of the Orangemen is highly praised. On the announcement being made to the Irish Catholics, after discussion, it was resolved "That the Irish Catholic Societies accept the report just made by Mr.
Devlin, and receive in good faith the infderating made by the Orange Society o-
the abandonment of the proposed parade
on the twelfth, and that our thanks are due to the Presidents of the local societies, Protestant and Catholic, whose efforts have brought about the end so desirable in the preservation of the public
peace, and the perpetuation of good feeling in our community."

BEGINNING OF THE RIOT.

(From the Star—12th.)

As two young women were returning from the service in Knox Church this afternoon at half-past one o'clock, one of them who wore an Orange ribbon was assailed by another woman who tried to tear the ribbon from her breast. The wearer struck her assailant with a parasol
when a scuffle followed. A man who interfered was at once set upon by the mob, when he drew a revolver to defend himself. Two revolvers were then presented by other parties, when Mr. Mc-Namee, coming up, told them to put their pistols away. The man then ran off, followed by an immense crowd; and after a sharp race during which many kicks and blows were made at him, succeeded in reaching Ansell's cigar store,
where he took refuge, as did also another man and two women. The infuriated crowd gathered about the door of the shop, which they blockaded for some time, although requested to move off by some men who appeared to speak with authority.

As another gentleman and lady was proceeding down street, the cry was raised
that she was one who had been wearing a lily, and instantly a rough endeavoured to pull off her bonnet. Her husband struck out from the shoulder and knocked the scoundrel down, and then had to fly for his life, as the menacing crowd closed in. He couched about and finally under cover of a friends' revolver
made entrance into a store, his friend having also to follow most rapidly. The crowd then watched outside until the rioting in South Victoria Square drew off
the people, and the two made their escape.

ATTEMPTED RESCUE—NARROW ESCAPE.

Shortly before the fatal shooting affray
Mr. F. C. Henshaw, son of the well-known citizen. Mr. F. W. Henshaw, rushed into the crowd to rescue a man whom the roughs had down and were kicking to death, near Dunn's store. Mr.
Henshaw, who is a powerful young man,
pulled back a rough, the principal assailant, whereupon several turned upon him,
and he was in a moment struggling in a crowd of probably over a hundred. He thought he would scarcely get out alive,
but struck out as well as he could, and while he had received numberless blows

a ring, which bore his name, 'Thomas Lett Hackett,' on one side, and The Commercial Agency on the reverse.
The murdered man was of diminutive size, dressed in a dark tweed suit. It is learned that he was a city reporter for John McKillop & Co's Commercial
Agency, his parents are dead.

He was twenty years old, unmarried,
and had been employed by the firm for two years. He is described by his fellow-clerks as a most inoffensive and quiet
young man of strictly temperate habits,
and it is quite evident that he was a great favourite amongst his acquaintances.
He was an Orangeman and a member of the Church of England, and desiring to attend the service in Knox Church had left the office at a quarter to eleven, stating to the other clerks that he would wear neither regalia nor Orange emblem.

At two o'clock some of the mob which lingered around the scene of the murder were endeavoring to pick the lock on Messrs. Dunn's door, and a while afterwards, the door being opened by some person inside, a desperate rush was made for it, but it was again closed. The manner in which the police acted while a dense crowd was crushing upon the dead body
of Hackett was not creditable to them.
Immediately after this affray the armed force of the police were despatched to the scene from the central station; but the disturbance having ceased before their arrival they returned.

About one o'clock a man was seen in Fortification Lane delivering rounds of ball cartridge to numbers of the crowd.
He did this openly, and a policeman ten paces distant.

WHO IS TO BLAME.

(From the Witness of 13th inst.)

It is hard to say that on any particular person the obloquy of yesterday's disorder and death rests. But with one accord the city accuses its Chief Magistrate of wilful neglect of duty. Had he in the morning ordered the forces he had at command, military and civil, to compel the gathering crowds to move on, there would in all probability have been no such gatherings as those which held our city under control, and certainly the mob
would not have had the distinguished part of being the arbiters of our city's honor for even a few hours. This in the morning would not have required much effort. But it was not until the crisis had completely passed that he took any action at all, not until he had sent his special messenger in plain clothes to see if there was really any sign of a disturbance. Wilful ignorance cannot prove any excuse for dereliction of duty, and our order-loving citizens as a whole should express their disapproval of Mayor Beaudrey's disgraceful incapacity yesterday,
not by any loud, unseemly talking, but in the most firm and decided way. The police yesterday, they did quite as well as was generally expected of them. They arrived at the scene of action some time
after the troubles had passed, and left it before they began again. But still, as far as their influence was concerned, it was of very little importance where they were.

The strongest indignation is expressed
on all sides at the pusillanimous conduct of the authorities, and, more especially,
of the Mayor. No matter who one meets the responsibility for the disgrace brought upon the city by a villainous mob, and the loss of a valuable human life, as well as serious injuries to several citizens, is placed upon those whose duty it was to make proper provision for the safety and the peace of the city. An influential Catholic gentleman said to us, to-day,
that the Orangemen of the city deserved
the highest honor for carrying out, with the strictest integrity, the agreements
they entered into with the Presidents of the National Societies. He repudiated, at the same time, in the strongest manner, on behalf of the Irish Catholic Union

the nostril by a kick, said to have inflicted after death; and the mouth bore marks of violence. There are said to be many evidences of other injuries on different parts of the body.

Altogether, the sight was a most tidy one. The hall was heavily draped mourning, and innumerable flower wreaths crosses and bouquets, a
which the orange lily was conspicuous scattered over the silver-mo-casket inclosing the remains, and a black cloth of the table. The on-scription was one at the head of the fin, standing out prominently in letters on the black ground of the dir-

THE COMING CANDIDATE.

Pending the approaching general election, the question of the coming candidate for the representation of Lennox in the House of Commons, in the interests of the Tory Party, and in opposition to the present incumbent, Hon. R. J. CARTWRIGHT, assumes a considerable degree of importance. A recent number of the Beaver gave currency to the rumour that JOHN T. GRANGE Esq. M. P. P., was likely to have that honor. But of that there is now no possibility. The Standard with a degree of "positivity" indicative of its holding the whole Tory Party in the county of Lennox, in the hollow of its hand, and under its thumb besides, is in a position to give an authoritative denial to the rumor. Nevertheless there is no doubt, but conjecture has been busy with the name of the last mentioned gentleman in reference to the said candidature, we suppose simply because he is the only available local man whose chances would even to the most sanguine of his friends, afford a bare dream of success. Besides one or two local aspirants, the Hon. LEWIS WALLBRIDGE has been mentioned as a victim probable to be selected to "redeem the good old county of Lennox." Whoever may be selected by the voice of the people—a honourous synonym of mere wire pulling, and intrigue in election matters especially, on the conservative side of the field, his chances of success are of the most problematical description.

The bare idea of any local man, or the Name, coming up, told them to put their pistols away. The man then ran off, followed by an immense crowd; and after a sharp race during which many kicks and blows were made at him, succeeded in reaching Ansell's cigar store, where he took refuge, as did also another man and two women. The infuriated crowd gathered about the door of the shop, which they blockaded for some time, although requested to move off by some men who appeared to speak with authority.

As another gentleman and lady was proceeding down street, the cry was raised that she was one who had been wearing a lily, and instantly a rough endeavor to pull off her bonnet. Her husband struck out from the shoulder and knocked the scoundrel down, and then had to fly for his life, as the menacing crowd closed in. He combated about and finally under cover of a friend's revolver made entrance into a store, his friend having also to follow most rapidly. The crowd then watched outside until the rioting in South Victoria Square drew off the people, and the two made their escape.

ATTEMPTED RESCUE—NARROW ESCAPE.

Shortly before the fatal shooting affray Mr. F. C. Henshaw, son of the well-known citizen. Mr. F. W. Henshaw, rushed into the crowd to rescue a man whom the roughs had down and were kicking to death, near Dunn's store. Mr. Henshaw, who is a powerful young man, pulled back a rough, the principal assailant, whereupon several turned upon him, and he was in a moment struggling in a crowd of probably over a hundred. He thought he would scarcely get out alive, but struck out as well as he could, and while he had received numberless blows from the rowdies, he also left his mark on several of them. Fortunately the attack on him enabled the unfortunate young man whom he had rushed in to rescue to escape. In the meanwhile Mr. Henshaw was forced up Dunn's steps, but could not obtain admittance, and the employees turned a deaf ear to his entreaties to admit him and save his life from the pistol shots that were coming about his ears. He saw these same employees, he says, hiding behind piles of goods at the time he requested to be admitted. After he had struggled until breathless and almost overpowered, a French Canadian, Mr. Shaw's foreman, interfered on his behalf and told the crowd that he was shot. The crowd then fell back, and Mr. Henshaw was allowed to escape. When seen shortly after the affair his eyes were swollen to an enormous size, and his face was black and blue. It was only by keeping his head down and striking out with his fists in front of him that he escaped at all. When Mr. Henshaw was driven against Dunn's steps he says he saw another young man whom he had not seen previously, struggling for his life, and he does not know whether the shot was fired at this person or at himself.

THE MURDER.

An eye witness of the shooting affair in Victoria Square gives us the following: A crowd of Irish Catholics had been waiting in Radegonde street for the man who had taken refuge in a house there, after protecting a lady who had been insulted for wearing an Orange lily. About twenty minutes past one, a young man dressed in light clothes who went past from the house, was believed to be he, and as he had an Orange lily the crowd rushed after him. When he got in front of the new buildings adjoining A. L. Glendinning's stores, he endeavored to run into Fortification Lane, but the crowd was too close on his heels, and then a gentleman with dark tweed clothes and with a moustache, interfered, stating that he would take the young fellow's part. At this the mob turned from the young man first pursued, and attacked the other. The first man then got clear and rushed into Dunn's. The second endeavored to rush after him, but the mob was so close that those inside shut the door suddenly, and he was at the mercy of the crowd. In this alarming position, elevated above the surging multitude, he such gatherings as those which held our city under control, and certainly the mob would not have had the distinguished part of being the arbiters of our city's honor for even a few hours. This in the morning would not have required much effort. But it was not until the crisis had completely passed that he took any action at all, not until he had sent his special messenger in plain clothes to see if there was really any sign of a disturbance. Wilful ignorance cannot prove any excuse for dereliction of duty, and our order-loving citizens as a whole should express their disapproval of Mayor Beaudry's disgraceful incapacity yesterday, not by any loud, unseemly talking, but in the most firm and decided way. The police yesterday, they did quite as well as was generally expected of them. They arrived at the scene of action some time after the troubles had passed, and left it before they began again. But still, as far as their influence was concerned, it was of very little importance where they were.

The strongest indignation is expressed on all sides at the pusillanimous conduct of the authorities, and, more especially, of the Mayor. No matter who one meets the responsibility for the disgrace brought upon the city by a villainous mob, and the loss of a valuable human life, as well as serious injuries to several citizens, is placed upon those whose duty it was to make proper provision for the safety and the peace of the city. An influential Catholic gentleman said to us, to-day, that the Orangemen of the city deserved the highest honor for carrying out, with the strictest integrity, the agreements they entered into with the Presidents of the National Societies. He repudiated, at the same time, in the strongest manner, on behalf of the Irish Catholic Union, any sympathy with the ruffianly mob whose deeds of violence they condemned most strongly. It was the opinion of this same gentleman, as of all others, that the onus of the unfortunate Hackett's death should be placed upon the Chief Magistrate, or whoever else was in authority in the city. A dozen police, he said, could have kept Victoria square clear, and prevented any disturbance. We could mention any number of men of position in the city, and among them Aldermen, who agree with every word uttered by the gentlemen we have quoted. In fact, we have never known, in all our experience such a union of condemnatory opinion, against a high public official as in this instance. A petition is about to be, or is already, in circulation, calling on the Mayor to resign.—Star.

THE IRISH CATHOLIC UNION.

At a meeting of the Union last evening, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

Resolved, That we, members of the Irish Catholic Union, representing the various branches of that organization, deeply deplore the calamity which the foolishness of one individual, and the impulsive onslaught of others, precipitated—that we hold that the Orange Association is no more amenable for the proceedings of that individual than the Irish Catholic Union should be held responsible for the acts of persons outside its ranks, or, if in their acting in disregard of the solemn injunctions given by its officers and leaders, and in direct contravention of the discipline enjoined for the occasion. And, further, that the Irish Catholic Union repudiate all sanction or approval—before or after—of such acts; and regret with an earnestness not excelled by any class in the community the proceedings by which a solemn compact for peace and forbearance would appear to have been violated. Resolved. That the Irish Catholic Union hereby solemnly warns its members, collectively and individually, against any interference, in any form, by look, word or action, with the projected funeral of the late T. L. Hackett—that we caution all members of the Union from any display or appearance on the streets calculated to be interpreted into opposition to such funeral; and we will hold any violation of this resolution—or any counsel thereto—as coming from an enemy not only of our or-

The St. Charles Orangemen, a large body, came next, the members of the Orange Order, Orange Young Brigade and Prentice Boys (Derry). The Hope Orangemen and then the Protestant Working men from Point St. Charles seven hundred strong. The Orange l from Ottawa, including Orangemen, Young Britons, five hundred strong. The Independent Order of Good Templars of this city, followed in their gala. Then the Montreal Grand Locals. The officers of the Orange Locals with the Silver Cornet Band of the Fusiliers, followed in front, preceded by the hearse bearing the body, drawn by four horses, caparisoned black the coffin within was richly decorated. The friends, members of Et. George's, St. Andrew's Irish Protestant Benevolent and German Societies followed in the order named, with a immense number of private citizens, including nearly all the principal merchants, Protestant clergymen, and others. Squad of city police, armed with carb brought up the rear. Shortly after procession moved on, the Prince of Wales regiment passed up Bleury Street to the cemetery, where a very stilted funeral sermon was preached by the Chas. A. Doudiet.

A gentleman who counted the nun in the procession places it at about 100 strong, all able bodied men; this is: sive of about 900 of the military, and the spectators must have numbered least twenty thousand. At least 100 viewed the body.

ON THE WAY TO THE CEMETERY.

Hardly had the procession got started before a middle-sized man, whose name is unknown, speaking to an Orangeman in the procession, drew a revolver from his hip pocket in a threatening manner. The Orangeman was quicker with weapon; in an instant the muzzle of pistol was between the eyes of the ruffian. The Orangeman said no word there was a rush at once, and the ruffian who provoked the first disturbance the opportunity to slink away. On south side of St. James street, a crowd of loafers, headed by a short, thick-set fellow in a white straw helmet, and a specimen of the lowest order of rowdies, insulted every fresh file of Orangemen with the coarsest blasphemy and profanity. The language used was so shocking, and it grew worse as the he approached. There was then a made forward by one of the ruffians seize the head of one of the horses, fear seized the women in the crowd, of whom fainted and were carried a A carabiniar galloped to the front, promptly brought back a company of artillery, who, with sword-bayonets fixed marched through the crowd, and for up across St. James st., and separated the swaying multitude from the prison. Then, facing about, the march resumed, the Silver Cornet band to up the mournful air it had been playing before the fracas occurred. This sun down McGill st., the roughs promptly overpowered. No arrests made. Certain it is that some of the roughs doubled around by drawing hearse, when the Orangemen poured on the assailants. In an instant there was a rush for the spot, and nothing to be seen but a crush of struggling. The leader of the hostile gang, yelling, shouting forth curses above the din of the surging mass. Panic seized the tators, and the noise of the threatened combat reached into Victoria Square where there was a vast throng. Instant all was confusion. A rush made for the scene of the fray, men in maniac haste over the palings shouts arose on all sides. Nothing note occurred until Zion Church reached. In the open space here a crowd had assembled, and as the tinny files of Orangemen passed up expressions uncomplimentary, not long deep, were lavished upon them. Only there was a rush and two were fired, but where they came from matter of dispute. No harm was beyond the excitement and panic caused. An instant after the firing of the streets were filled with

Whoever may be selected by the voice of the people—a generous synonym of mere wire pulling, and intrigue in election matters especially, on the conservative side of the field, his chances of success are of the most problematical description.

The bare idea of any local man, or the outsider named, contesting its riding with the ghost of a chance of success, is as preposterous as entering a plough horse for the Queen's Plate. Suppose in case of the election of one of these candidates, and in case of a change of government—both wild suppositions at the best—have any or the whole of the hypothetical candidates above alluded to, the ability and influence to secure to the county of Lennox, a perpetuation of the honor of supplying the Dominion cabinet with one of the most important ministers of the crown? In other words if a Conservative ministry were forced would any of them be qualified to take the portfolio of Minister of Finance with the ability and success that have characterized Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT's possession of it? The answer is too obvious require a word. still there are reasons why the Reformers of this county should not delay a most thorough re-organization and preparation for the coming contest. The political repetition of the fable, of the hare, and the tortoise, is not an impossibility. The Conservatives of the county have recently put themselves into a thorough state of re-organization, and are prepared to make a struggle for victory with a desperation proportionate to the improbability of their chances of success. The Tory party has into them—been too long out of power, and will leave no stone unturned to honour the prediction of the prophets who have so confidently foretold the reaction that is to save the country. Therefore it behooves Reformers, the champions of good and honest government, to be on the alert, and not let their present advantage lapse through an in-

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Montreal Gazette says:—"It is due to the volunteers of this city to record the strong expressions of praise which were on everyone's lips in relation to their conduct in the emergency through which the city has passed. They had been ordered to muster before it was known that the Orangemen had resolved not to walk; but as soon as that determination was arrived at, and the prospect of disturbance had apparently disappeared, they were relieved from duty. After the riot at Victoria square, and the murder of poor Hackett, orders were given for the volunteers to muster, and in less than two hours the regiments called out were under arms and ready for any emergency. Nothing could have been more prompt; there was no shirking of duty, every man was at his post. The volunteers certainly deserve the greatest credit for their promptness in obeying the call. It speaks well for the discipline of the force."

(From the Montreal Star—16th.)

VIEWING THE BODY.

All the morning, an immense crowd of people, including many ladies and young girls, pressed forward to view the remains of the late Thomas Lett Hackett, which were exposed in an apartment adjoining the Orange Lodge, 81 St. James st. As the forenoon wore away, the crowd increased, until it became impossible to gain admittance in consequence of the rush, and many had to go away disappointed. The spectacle presented by the body was deeply affecting; the women sobbed as they peered through the glass plate of the coffin at mutilated features, and even strong men were moved to tears.

Three bullets had entered the head through the face; one having passed through the left eye and one through the chin. The nose has been broken away at Suddenly there was a rush and two soldiers were fired, but where they came from matter of dispute. No harm was done beyond the excitement and panic caused. An instant after the firing of the soldiers the streets were filled with flying men and women, but order was soon restored and the procession marched to the theatre.

At St. Peter street a detachment of Prince of Wales Rifles formed the guard, and marched up by Bleury st to Fitchers fields.

ANOTHER VICTIM.

MONTREAL, July 16th, 8:45 p. m.—The Point St. Charles contingent Orangemen were on their way home the western suburbs they were met Wellington Bridge by an immense crowd of the opposite party. The latter a in a menacing manner, but did not attack however. Three youths who had lag somewhat behind the Orangemen came along, and the crowd of roughs made onslaught upon them with their revolvers. The boys ran, but one was shot do one ball striking in the neck and another in the back. He was taken to the hospital. The dastardly ruffians had a jolt over the affair. The police soon arrived but made no arrests.

The name of the young man shot Point St. Charles is William Elliott. He is from Lennoxville, Quebec, and here this morning to attend the funeral. He is not expected to live till morning. He is a wealthy man's son.

A woman named Doherty, about years old, was knocked down by a crowd on St. James st., and had her leg bone broken. Her daughter was badly injured.

10:45 p. m.—The Orangemen taken their departure by the night train for the west, being escorted to the depot by the military. No trouble occurred.

The sheriff of New York has notified the Quebec detectives that a reward of one thousand dollars is offered for the apprehension and delivery to him of Wm. Coners, charged with complicity in the robbery of the Northampton National Bank.

ring, which bore his name, 'Thomas ett Hackett,' on one side, and The Commercial Agency on the reverse. He murdered man was of diminutive size, dressed in a dark tweed suit. It is learned that he was a city reporter for John McKillop & Co's Commercial Agency, his parents are dead.

He was twenty years old, unmarried, and had been employed by the firm for two years. He is described by his fellow clerks as a most inoffensive and quiet young man of strictly temperate habits, and it is quite evident that he was a great favourite amongst his acquaintances. He was an Orangeman and a member of the Church of England, and desiring to attend the service in Knox Church had fit the office at a quarter to eleven, stating to the other clerks that he would wear neither regalia nor Orange emblem.

At two o'clock some of the mob which gathered around the scene of the murder were endeavoring to pick the lock on Dunn's door, and a while afterwards, the door being opened by some person inside, a desperate rush was made into it, but it was again closed. The manner in which the police acted while a dense crowd was crushing upon the dead body of Hackett was creditable to them. Immediately after this affray the armed force of the police were despatched to the scene from the central station; but no disturbance having ceased before their arrival they returned.

About one o'clock a man was seen in Fortification Lane delivering rounds of all cartridge to numbers of the crowd. He did this openly, and a policeman ten paces distant.

WHO IS TO BLAME.

It is hard to say that on any particular person the obloquy of yesterday's disorder and death rests. But with one accord the city accuses its Chief Magistrate of wilful neglect of duty. Had he in the morning ordered the forces he had at command, military and civil, to compel the gathering crowds to move on, there could in all probability have been no such gatherings as those which held our city under control, and certainly the mob could not have had the distinguished air of being the arbiters of our city's honor for even a few hours. This in the morning would not have required much effort. But it was not until the crisis had completely passed that he took any action at all, not until he had sent his special messenger in plain clothes to see if there was really any sign of a disturbance. Wilful ignorance cannot prove any excuse for dereliction of duty, and our order-loving citizens as a whole should express their disapproval of Mayor Beatty's disgraceful incapacity yesterday, not by any loud, unseemly talking, but in the most firm and decided way. The police yesterday, they did quite as well as was generally expected of them. They arrived at the scene of action some time after the troubles had passed, and left it before they began again. But still, as far as their influence was concerned, it was of very little importance where they were.

The strongest indignation is expressed on all sides at the pusillanimous conduct of the authorities, and more especially, of the Mayor. No matter who one meets he is responsible for the disgrace brought upon the city by a villainous mob, and he less of a valuable human life, as well as serious injuries to several citizens, is placed upon those whose duty it was to make proper provision for the safety and peace of the city. An influential Catholic gentleman said to us, to-day, that the Orangemen of the city deserved the highest honor for carrying out, with the strictest integrity, the agreements they entered into with the Presidents of the militia by a kick, said to have been inflicted after death; and the mouth also bore marks of violence. There are also said to be many evidences of other injuries on different parts of the body.

Altogether, the sight was a most ghastly one. The hall was heavily draped in mourning, and innumerable flowers, in wreaths crosses and bouquets, among which the orange lily was conspicuous, were scattered over the silver-mounted casket inclosing the remains, and on the black cloth of the table. The only inscription was one at the head of the coffin, standing out prominently in white letters on the black ground of the drapery. It was as follows:—

THOMAS LETT HACKETT,
"NO SURRENDER."

THE FUNERAL.

About forty city police, were on duty, about half-a-dozen being employed in keeping the sidewalk clear. For the first time during the day the rough element made its appearance, and exhibited a good deal of reluctance to obey the orders of the officers on duty.

Shortly after two o'clock, the various Orange lodges from Ottawa and vicinity, Toronto, Brockville and other towns in Ontario, and marched in a body to the Orange Hall in St. James street, the starting point of the funeral procession. These lodges carried a Union Jack and wore the badges and insignia of the brotherhood.

At three o'clock precisely, the procession having been formed on St. James street, received the order from the Grand Marshal and moved off. The troop of cavalry, at the head of the infantry, took precedence, and as they marched past the line of procession, the Orangemen and private citizens received them with enthusiastic cheers. The military went on considerably in advance. A squad of police was placed in front of the funeral procession, the Grand Marshal, Mr. Robinson, well mounted coming next. The Orange Young Britons of Ottawa, took the lead, with their band at the head.

The St. Charles Orangemen, a very large body, came next, the members of the Orange Order, Orange Young Britons and 'Prentice Boys (Derry.) The Port Hope Orangemen and then the Protestant Working men from Point St. Charles seven hundred strong. The Orange body from Ottawa, including Orangeman and Young Britons, five hundred strong. The Independent Order of Good Templars, of this city, followed in their regalia. Then the Montreal Orange Lodges. The officers of the Grand Lodges, with the Silver Cornet Band of the 6th Fusiliers, followed in front, preceded by the hearse bearing the body drawn by four horses, caparisoned in black the coffin within was richly decorated. The friends, members of Et. George's, St. Andrew's Irish Protestant Benevolent and German Societies followed in the order named, with a immense number of private citizens, including nearly all the principal merchants, Protestant clergymen, and others. A squad of city police, armed with carbines, brought up the rear. Shortly after the procession moved out, the Prince of Wales regiment passed up Bleury Street to the cemetery, where a very stirring funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Chas. A. Dondiet.

A gentleman who counted the numbers in the procession places it at about 5,000 strong, all able bodied men; this is exclusive of about 900 of the military, while the spectators must have numbered at least twenty thousand. At least 3,000 viewed the body.

ATTACK ON THE ORANGEMEN—THREE MEN WOUNDED.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 13.—At Charlottetown, P. E. I., last evening, after the Orangemen had been dismissed, several of them stood out in front of the lodge-room, when they were greeted by a shower of stones from the roughs in the street. Two Orangemen were severely hurt. Another volley of stones followed, and a pistol shot from the lodge-room wounded a man. Great excitement ensued. Volley after volley of stones from the streets were answered by about twenty shots from the lodge-room. Two men were wounded by the bullets, and one severely hurt in the head by a stone. For an hour the city was in the hands of the mob, as the police were useless. The Stipendiary Magistrates, to make peace, persuaded the Orangemen to lower their flag, and quiet was restored.

The Orangemen held an excited meeting to-day, and condemned the police and the Stipendiary Magistrates.

One hundred special constables have been sworn in, and twenty-eight warrants for the arrest of the ring-leaders issued. Several arrests have already been made.

ler and death rests. But with one accord the city accuses its Chief Magistrate wilful neglect of duty. Had he in the morning ordered the forces he had at command, military and civil, to compel the gathering crowds to move on, there would in all probability have been no such gatherings as those which held our city under control, and certainly the mob would not have had the distinguished right of being the arbiters of our city's honor for even a few hours. This in the morning would not have required much effort. But it was not until the crisis had completely passed that he took any action at all, not until he had sent his official messenger in plain clothes to see there was really any sign of a disturbance. Wilful ignorance cannot properly excuse for dereliction of duty, and for ordering citizens as a whole, and pressing their disapproval of Mayor Beauvoir's disgraceful incapacity yesterday, but by any loud, unseemly talking, but the most firm and decided way. The day yesterday, they did quite as well as is generally expected of them. They raved at the scene of action some time after the troubles had passed, and left it for them to begin again. But still, as far as their influence was concerned, it was of very little importance where they are.

The strongest indignation is expressed on all sides at the pusillanimous conduct of the authorities, and, more especially, the Mayor. No matter who one meets the responsibility for the disgrace brought on the city by a villainous mob, and the loss of a valuable human life, as well as serious injuries to several citizens, is placed upon those whose duty it was to make proper provision for the safety and peace of the city. An influential Catholic gentleman said to us, to-day, that the Orangemen of the city deserved the highest honor for carrying out, with strictest integrity, the agreements they entered into with the Presidents of the National Societies. He repudiated, at the same time, in the strongest manner, on behalf of the Irish Catholic Union, any sympathy with the ruffianly mob whose deeds of violence they condemned most strongly. It was the opinion of this same gentleman, as of all others, that the conduct of the unfortunate Hackett's death should be placed upon the Chief Magistrate, or whoever else was in authority in the city. A dozen police, he said, could have kept Victoria square clear, and prevented any disturbance. He could mention any number of men of position in the city, and among them Almon, who agree with every word uttered by the gentlemen we have quoted. In fact, we have never known, in all our experience such a union of condemnatory opinion, against a high public official as in this instance. A petition is out to be, or is already, in circulation, calling on the Mayor to resign.—Star.

At a meeting of the Union last evening, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—
Resolved, That we, members of the Irish Catholic Union, representing the various branches of that organization, deeply deplore the calamity which the hardness of one individual, and the impulsive onslaught of others, precipitated—that we hold that the Orange Association is no more amenable for the proceedings of that individual than the Irish Catholic Union should be held responsible for the acts of persons outside its ranks, or, if in their acting in disregard of the solemn injunctions given by its officers and leaders, and in direct contravention of the discipline enjoined for the occasion. And, further, that the Irish Catholic Union repudiate all sanction or approval—before or after—of such acts; and regret with an earnestness not excelled by any class in the community the proceedings by which a solemn compact of peace and forbearance would appear to have been violated. Resolved, That the Irish Catholic Union hereby solemnly warn its members, collectively and individually, against any interference, in any form, by look, word or action, with the projected funeral of the late T. L.

considerably in advance. A squad of police was placed in front of the funeral procession, the Grand Marshal, Mr. Robinson, well mounted coming next. The Orange Young Britons of Ottawa, took the lead, with their band at the head.
The St. Charles Orangemen, a very large body, came next, the members of the Orange Order, Orange Young Britons and Prentice Boys (Derry.) The Port Hope Orangemen and then the Protestant Working men from Point St. Charles seven hundred strong. The Orange body from Ottawa, including Orangemen and Young Britons, five hundred strong. The Independent Order of Good Templars, of this city, followed in their regalia. Then the Montreal Orange Lodges. The officers of the Grand Lodges, with the Silver Cornet Band of the 6th Fusiliers, followed in front, preceded by the hearse bearing the body drawn by four horses, caparisoned in black the coffin within was richly decorated. The friends, members of St. George's, St. Andrew's Irish Protestant Benevolent and German Societies followed in the order named, with a numerous number of private citizens, including nearly all the principal merchants, Protestant clergymen, and others. A squad of city police, armed with carbines, brought up the rear. Shortly after the procession moved out, the Prince of Wales regiment passed up Bleury Street to the cemetery, where a very stirring funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Chas. A. Doudiet.
A gentleman who counted the numbers in the procession places it at about 5,000 strong, all able bodied men; this is exclusive of about 900 of the military, while the spectators must have numbered at least twenty thousand. At least 3,000 viewed the body.
ON THE WAY TO THE CEMETERY.
Hardly had the procession got fairly started before a middle-sized man, whose name is unknown, speaking to an Orangeman in the procession, drew a revolver from his hip pocket in a threatening way. The Orangeman was quicker with his weapon; in an instant the muzzle of his pistol was between the eyes of the braggart. The Orangeman said no word, but there was a rush at once, and the fellow who provoked the first disturbance took the opportunity to slink away. On the south side of St. James street, a crowd of loafers, headed by a short, thick-set fellow in a white straw helmet, and another, a specimen of the lowest order of roughs, insulted every fresh file of Orangemen with the coarsest blasphemy and profanity. The language used was simply shocking, and it grew worse as the hearse approached. There was then a rush made forward by one of the ruffians to seize the head of one of the horses, and fear seized the women in the crowd, some of whom fainted and were carried away. A carabiniere galloped to the front, and promptly brought back a company of the artillery, who, with sword-bayonets fixed, marched through the crowd, and formed up across St. James st., and separated the swaying multitude from the procession. Then, facing about, the march was resumed, the Silver Cornet band taking up the mournful air it had been playing before the fracas occurred. This surged down McGill st., the roughs being promptly overpowered. No arrests were made. Certain it is that some of the roughs doubled around by drawing the hearse, when the Orangemen poured up on the assailants. In an instant there was a rush for the spot, and nothing was to be seen but a crush of struggling men. The leader of the hostile gang yelling and shouting forth curses above the din of the surging mass. Panic seized the spectators, and the noise of the threatening combat reached into Victoria Square, where there was a vast throng. In an instant all was confusion. A rush was made for the scene of the fray, men tore in maniac haste over the palings, and shouts arose on all sides. Nothing of note occurred until Zion Church was reached. In the open space here a great crowd had assembled, and as the continuous files of Orangemen passed up ex-

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Montreal Gazette says:—"It is to the volunteers of this city to record strong expressions of praise which e on everyone's lips in re- on to their conduct in the emergency ough which the city has passed. y had been ordered to muster before as known that the Orangemen had dved not to walk; but as soon as that ermination was arrived at, and the spect of disturbance had apparently appeared, they were relieved from duty. or the riot at Victoria square, and the rder of poor Hackett, orders were an for the volunteers to muster, and in than two hours the regiments called were under arms and ready for any agency. Nothing could have been e prompt; there was no shirking of y, every man was at his post. The nteers certainly deserve the greatest lit for their promptness in obeying call. It speaks well for the discipline he force."

(From the Montreal Star—16th.)

VIEWING THE BODY.

all the morning, an immense crowd of ple, including many ladies and young s, pressed forward to view the remains he late Thomas Lett Hackett, which e exposed in an apartment adjoining Orange Lodge, 81 St. James st. As forenoon wore away, the crowd in- ased, until it became impossible to n admittance in consequence of the h, and many had to go away disap- nted. The spectacle presented by body was deeply affecting; the men sobbed as they peered through glass plate of the coffin at mutilated tures, and even strong men were mov- to tears.

Three bullets had entered the head ough the face; one having passed ough the left eye and one through the u. The nose has been broken away at south side of St. James street, a crowd of loafers, headed by a short, thick-set fellow in a white straw helmet, and another, a specimen of the lowest order of roughs, unsuited every fresh file of Orangemen with the coarsest blasphemy and profan- ity. The language used was simply shocking, and it grew worse as the hearse approached. There was then a rush made forward by one of the ruffians to seize the head of one of the horses, and fear seized the women in the crowd, some of whom fainted and were carried away. A carabinieri galloped to the front, and promptly brought back a company of the artillery, who, with sword-bayonets fixed, marched through the crowd, and formed up across St. James st., and separated the swaying multitude from the proces- sion. Then, facing about, the march was resumed, the Silver Cornet band taking up the mournful air it had been playing before the fracas occurred. This surged down McGill st., the roughs being promptly overpowered. No arrests were made. Certain it is that some of the roughs doubled around by drawing the hearse, when the Orangemen pounced upon the assailants. In an instant there was a rush for the spot, and nothing was to be seen but a crush of struggling men. The leader of the hostile gang yelling and shouting forth curses above the din of the surging mass. Panic seized the spec- tators, and the noise of the threatening combat reached into Victoria Square, where there was a vast throng. In an instant all was confusion. A rush was made for the scene of the fray, men tore in maddened haste over the palings, and shouts arose on all sides. Nothing of note occurred until Zion Church was reached. In the open space here a great crowd had assembled, and as the con- tinuous files of Orangemen passed up ex- pressions uncomplimentary, not loud but deep, were lavished upon them. Sud- denly there was a rush and two shots were fired, but where they came from is a matter of dispute. No harm was done beyond the excitement and panic caused. An instant after the firing of the shots the streets were filled with flying men and women, but order was soon restored, and the procession marched to the Cath- edral.

At St. Peter street a detachment of the Prince of Wales Rifles formed the rear guard, and marched up by Bleury street to Fitchiers fields.

ANOTHER VICTIM.

MONTREAL, July 16th, 8:45 p. m.—As the Point St. Charles contingent of Orangemen were on their way home in the western suburbs they were met at Wellington Bridge by an immense crowd of the opposite party. The latter acted in a menacing manner, but did not attack, however. Three youths who had lagged somewhat behind the Orangemen came along, and the crowd of roughs made an onslaught upon them with their revolvers. The boys ran, but one was shot down, one ball striking in the neck and another in the back. He was taken to the hospi- tal. The dastardly ruffians had a jubilee over the affair. The police soon arrived but made no arrests.

The name of the young man shot at Point St. Charles is William Elliott. He is from Lennoxville, Quebec, and came here this morning to attend the funeral. He is not expected to live till morning. He is a wealthy man's son.

A woman named Doherty, about 60 years old, was knocked down by the crowd on St. James st., and had her col- lar bone broken. Her daughter was also badly injured.

10:45 p. m.—The Orangemen have taken their departure by the night trains for the west, being escorted to the depot by the military. No trouble occurred.

The sheriff of New York has notified the Quebec detectives that a reward of one thousand dollars is offered for the apprehension and delivery to him of one Wm. Coners, charged with complicity in the robbery of the Northampton National Bank.

BACK ON THE ORANGEMEN—THREE MEN WOUNDED.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 13.—At Charlottetown, P. E. I., last evening, after the Orangemen had been dismissed, several of them stood out in front of the lodge-room, when they were greeted by a shower of stones from the roughs in the street. Two Orangemen were severely hurt. Another volley of stones followed, and a pistol shot from the lodge-room wounded a man. Great excitement ensued. Volley after volley of stones from the streets was answered by about twenty shots from the lodge-room. Two men were wounded by the bullets, and one severely hurt in the head by a stone. For an hour the city was in the hands of a mob, as the police were useless. The Stipendiary Magistrates, to make peace, persuaded the Orangemen to lower their flag, and quiet was restored.

The Orangemen held an excited meeting to-day, and condemned the police and the Stipendiary Magistrates. One hundred special constables have been sworn in, and twenty-eight warrants for the arrest of the ring-leaders issued. Several arrests have already been made.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JULY, 20th 1877.

Business Change.

Mr. R. A. Weese has removed to Mr. Molloy's old stand in the Grange block. His stock has been replenished, and the premises has been repainted and improved.

All Aboard for Niagara.

The Belleville Masonic excursion on Tuesday next will be one of the cheapest of the season. Parties from Napanee will take the morning Express at 5:52. Return tickets $2.75, good for ten days.

Caution to Lady Teachers.

A lady teacher in the County of Frontenac has had her certificate suspended for making incorrect returns, and not accounting for a portion of the Government grant received by her.

Fine Wheat.

Mr. Robert Maxwell, Township of Kingston, has left us a fine sample of spring wheat, measuring fully five feet, which he says is the average on a field of twelve acres.

Complimentary.

In a notice of the cricket match, the Picton Gazette says: "Our boys speak in the highest terms of the treatment they received while in Napanee. A return match will be played here shortly."

The "Pilgrim's" Progress.

The favorite little steamer Pilgrim, has carried, on an average, forty passengers a day during the past week. Several picnic and fishing parties have returned, well satisfied with her superior accommodations, punctuality, and speed.

The "New York."

Capt. Collier has sold this steamer to Mr. John Soby formerly of the Brisco House, she has been overhauled and repaired at Mill Point, and will be repainted and put in complete trim before leaving on her first excursion trip next Wednesday. Capt. Collier will run her over the usual Bay and Lake route.

Yachting—The Pioneer.

Mr. Edwin Dickens of the Pioneer, intends joining the cruise of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club. Messrs Geo. Gifford sen., and M. W. Strange jr., of Kingston; John R. Cumming of Trenton; and John Mackie and John Dickens of Napanee, were elected honorary members of the club at the last meeting. The Pioneer is at present cruising in the Thousand Isles.

Grand Excursion.

The Napanee Juvenile Temple will muster in full force on Thursday the 26th inst., for an excursion to Indian Point, by the steamer, New York, which leaves Bowey's wharf at 7 o'clock a. m. That great natural wonder, the "Lake of the Mountain" will probably be visited, and other places of interest on the route, which is the most pleasant that can be taken during the summer season. Tickets 25 cents.

Law Regarding School Books.

A temporary says:—Another school case has been decided by the Minister of Education: A party in Brantford refused to pay a fee of ten cents a month, imposed by the School Board, on the ground that he supplied his own books, that the fee was exorbitant, and that the Board had no right to refuse tuition to the child of a rate-payer because he did not pay the fee. The opinion of the Minister of Education was "that it is immaterial whether his child used the books furnished by the trustees or not—that the fee imposed is within the statutory right of the trustees, and that the mode of collection prescribed by the general regulations of excluding the pupil from the school while the nonpayment continues."

A Vote of Thanks.

The Fire Brigade has tendered a vote of thanks to Messrs. Ferguson Bros., for procuring and furnishing their belts &c., at the makers' prices.

The Weather.

On Monday the thermometer stood 93° in the shade, Monday evening being the only hot night of the season. Several refreshing rains have since cooled the atmosphere.

Base Ball—Challenge.

We are instructed by the Captain of the Silver Leafs, to say, that they are now open for all challenges, and wish to hear from Adelphustown, Newburgh, or any juvenile club, between Napanee and Toronto, under 19 years of age.

Help.

Mr. Chas. Ham, the modest and active Left Field of the Silver Leaf B. B. C., is around with a card requesting aid to enable his club to test their muscle and skill with some distant city to the west of us. All spare dimes in aid of this worthy object, will perhaps ultimately result in securing for Napanee, the honor of having the crack club of the Dominion.

Eggs-traordinary.

Mr. Robt. Webster of this place has shown us half a dozen Leghorn eggs, 2½ in diameter, and weighing 27 ounces. We wish it distinctly understood that these are bona fide hens' eggs, as there is not an ostrich in our vicinity, and none were imported this season. Mr. W. wishes to hear from the Kingston Whig and other sporting paper as he now holds the championship for Napanee.

Gone but not Forgotten.

Our esteemed fellow citizen, Mr. Geo. Stevenson—whose watchmaking and jewelry establishment was the attraction of the "West End"—finding his health suffering through close attention to business, took the "mid-night" on Wednesday, for Saratoga, where he intends to recuperate previous to a trip to the Silver Hills of Nevada, and perhaps the Pacific coast or Japan. From thence he hopes to return, improved in health and strength, to renew old acquaintance, and revisit the scenes of his youth.

Grand Regatta.

The Brockville Yachting Association will hold their annual sailing regatta, over a twenty mile course, on Thursday, July 26th instant. The regatta will commence at 10 a. m., and will include a handicap race open to all. There are three prizes offered, the first $60; the second $25, and the third $15. Ten per cent. is to be deducted from the winning yachts only. Entries in writing must be made to the Secretary before the 24th inst. We understand Capt. John Dickens will enter the Pioneer.

Assault.

Before Mayor Williams on Saturday, Wm. Wilson, charged Wm. Joyce with assault, both of N. Fredericksburgh. On the evening of 12th inst., Joyce while driving near Mr. Hilton's house, called for Wilson who came out to the inside of the fence, after exchanging a few words Joyce struck at Wilson with the butt end of a whip, defendant, retreated, intending to retaliate with a stick of wood, but was prevented by his brother. After some contradictory evidence between Wilson and his witnesses, Joyce was fined $3 and $5.35 which was paid into Court. A woman was the original cause of the trouble. E. B. Stone for plaintiff, J. H. Madden, for defendant.

Firemen's Excursion.

The Napanee Fire Brigade will open the excursion season next week. The New York will be in readiness for the occasion, she arrived here from Mill Point.

Rogers, collectors roll be referred to Finance Committee to report on at next regular meeting—Carried.

On motion the question of plank walks was deferred till next Wednesday evening.

FIREMEN'S HALL.

A communication was read from Captain of Fire Co., complaining on behalf of the Co., that the Firemen's room was used for other purposes. Mov. Roe, sec. Carscallen, that the Firemen's room be under the direction of the Capt. of the Fire Co. Carried.

Councilor Frélick entered and took his seat.

Mov. Joy, sec. Carscallen, that the matter of allowing A. Smith Esq to open up street drain near his place be referred to Street Committee with power to act—Carried.

THE POLICE FORCE.

Mov. Geddes, sec. McNeill, that Mr. Storms, as a constable employed by this corporation, be not allowed to serve warrants, summonses, or subpoenas, outside of this corporation, unless the crime for any such case shall have been committed within this corporation—Lost.

Mov. Roe, sec. Geddes that a special committee composed of Messrs Miller, McNeill and Geddes be appointed to examine into the advisability of discharging the caretaker of the Town Hall, and have the chief of Police do the duties in addition to his present work, said committee to report at the next regular meeting—Carried.

ACCOUNTS.

Downey Bros. Coal, Referred to Com., on Fire and water, with power to act.

An account of A. R. Lee, for setting out and painting buoys in river in 1876, was referred to Com., on Town Property to report on. The following were ordered to be paid, R. Easton Treasurer, ams paid $30.13. G. T. Mair & Bro., repairs to Engine $2 Andrew Gould, drawing Hose $1. Jno. Vine, pine knots for Engine $1. Jas. Perry splitting cedar $23.50.

Council adjourned till special meeting Wednesday evening.

Wednesday evening, July 18th.

Council met pursuant to adjournment Mayor in chair. Present Messrs. Carscallen, Cliff, Frélick, Herring, James, Lane, McNeill, Roe, Miller and Joy.

A communication was read from Wm. McMullen Belleville, respecting Collectors roll for 1876.—Filed.

PLANK WALKS.

The following moves were carried, That the Street Com. let by public auction the jobs of building all walks ordered to-night.

A new 6 feet plank walk W. side Robt. st., from Dundas to residence of J. B. McGun.

New 6 ft. walk front of McMullen's building to Anderson's corner.

3 ft. walk from E. Vines to Isaac Ranous E. side Richmond road.

6 ft. walk opposite W. Ward Academy.

New 6 ft. walk S. side Bridge st., from Centre to West st.

Walk N. side Frederick from Raglan st., to Stevenson's gate.

Mov. Roe, sec. Miller, that the matter of raising funds for building of sidewalks be deferred until next meeting, and that no action be taken on the plankwalks already passed, until after provision has been made for the funds—Carried.

Mov. Geddes, sec. Miller, that the broken stone now owned by the corporation be put on streets at once, under direction of Street Committee.—Carried.

An account of Downey & Bro., coal for Treasurers office, $22.51, ordered to be paid.—Council adjourned.

TAMWORTH—THE TWELFTH OF JULY.

Tamworth was densely crowded on that peculiar day. It is said there were more people here than at any other time.

sally obeyed, would set all right bring all to order. I should say, in order of the day here was, (with but exception) peace, and pleasure, I think that the Dunkin law was violated here. The Rev. T. Clark, Kennebec in his speech on the stand, that he was in Tamworth before, without wing liquor drinking and too often dard's. This was seen that even Tamworth, and even at the time he said it can be proved that there was sold in the grove, and drinking at the crowd, too bad.

The Montreal affair has created agitation in the minds of the people around this locality. I presume to talk that the Orange Society will many new members shortly.

THE WAR NEWS.

DEFEAT OF THE RUSSIANS IN THEIR ATTEMPT TO CROSS THE BALKANS—DETAILED BATTLE.

A correspondent at Geni Saghar reports that on Monday afternoon Turks under Liman had an engage with the Russians, defeating them driving them back into the Balkans heavy loss. The battle was at Fec twelve miles from Geni Saghar. Russian forces consisted of infantry cavalry, outnumbering the Turks, a first attack was repulsed, and a flank column of a superior force of dismounted dragons greatly imperilled the Turkish position, the Turkish artillery, splendedly handled, raking the Russians and nung them at every discharge. Perceiving the terrible havoc by the Turk's Gen. Gourkha ordered the Russian charge. A fearful hand-to-hand combat ensued. "Turks formed into h squares. After losing several guns, Russians attacked desperately, and full carnage followed. The Russian flanking movement and desperate slaughter threatened to exterminate the Turks, when suddenly a brisk firing the left announced the arrival of Turkish reinforcements under Raouf Pasha. Russians had no artillery and a rapid advance of Turkish reinforcement comp them to face a new enemy, thus aling their opponents an opportunity to new the attack vigorously. The Russian thus held between two rows of ba ets was completely overwhelmed. Cossacks made a splendid resist fighting with the utmost bravery. Turkish charge was made over heavy dead bodies, driving the Russians into the mountains in a precipitate flight. The Turks pursued the flying Russians until they reached the mountain. This Russian advanced column consisted of Circassians and Cossacks, commanded by Col. Judelmim. The main body commanded by General Gourkha, were in light flying order, without gun transports or artillery. It is possible to estimate their losses. Russian main army intended to cross Balkans at this point, the 8th corps. It is not known what effect the pulse of Gourkha's flying column have on the main advance.

ATROCITIES UNDER RUSSIAN COLOR.

Despatches from Shumla and Buch describe the march of the Russian Europe, which is tarnished by atrocities committed by the Bulgarians and Cossacks, unhindered by the Russian Cavalry push their way ahead, spreading terror in every direction. The Mussul families fly terrified, and the savage garians fall on the helpless crowds massacre them in cold blood. Fugitives are pouring into Shumla and Varna horrible tales of death and suffering. The country is alive with Russians. They hold the road from Biela to Tesl and are marching by way of Demirap. Capon pass to Aidos and Jamboli. They threaten Rasgrad, where the Turks master in full force on Thursday the 26th inst., for an excursion to Indian Point, by the steamer, New York, which leaves Bowey's wharf at 7 o'clock a. m. That great natural wonder, the "Lake of the Mountain" will probably be visited, and other places of interest on the route, which is the most pleasant that can be taken during the summer season. Tickets 25 cents.

A contemporary says:—Another school case has been decided by the Minister of Education: A party in Brantford refused to pay a fee of ten cents a month, imposed by the School Board, on the ground that he supplied his own books, that the fee was exorbitant, and that the Board had no right to refuse tuition to the child of a rate-payer because he did not pay the fee. The opinion of the Minister of Education was that it is immaterial whether his child used the books furnished by the trustees or not—that the fee imposed is within the statutory right of the trustees, and that the mode of collection prescribed by the general regulations of excluding the pupil from the school while the non-payment continues, can be legitimately exercised, notwithstanding the general declaration of the law that all public schools are free.

The Recent Death By Lightning.

We have been furnished by Mr. Allison with the following particulars relating to the death of young Basilie Crevier on the 12th inst., in addition to what appeared in the papers of that date. In company with Mr. S. Wright, foreman, he was engaged in repairing the M. Tel. Co.'s line four miles south of Tamworth. About five o'clock in the afternoon, Wright and deceased were together, while the latter was trimming the brush from a tree in contact with the wire. The knife being attached to a long pole in the hands of Crevier, Wright was just giving directions, what small limbs to cut, as the flash came. Wright fell, but soon recovered and saw Crevier lying on his back in the ditch, beside him, with his eyes fixed. He rained him with his hat and tried to bring him too, in about ten minutes he recovered a little and remarked "take me away out of this" in English, which was very unusual as he always spoke in French, even if asked a question in English. He then expired. After the accident the body was carried to the residence of Mr. Robt. Reid (farmer) at Hannah's corners, where they kindly assisted our foreman in every possible way to restore life. Mr. Reid drove the body to Napanee. No blame can be attached to the Company as the accident was purely accidental. The poles were shattered, and the wires melted in several places, by the flash which killed Crevier and damaged the instruments in Croyden and Tamworth. The young man was the sole support of a widowed mother. His remains were forwarded to his home at St. Anne's P. Q., by the midnight train.

Cricket—Return Match.

The return match between Belleville and Napanee was played on the latter's ground, on Monday. It will be seen from the score that Napanee was badly beaten in the first innings. The fielding of Belleville was excellent, but some ridiculous decisions of their umpire, created a deal of dissatisfaction. A little previous "reading up" in Cricket rules would have been beneficial to this gentleman. The Belleville Intelligencer says:—"The strongest eleven ought to have been sent, but this was not done, most of the team who were selected to go to Napanee belonging to the second eleven." The above may be true, with the exception of Clarke and Egan, two of the most effective players in the Belleville club, and who, doubtless, turned the scale. Mr. Jno. Bowey was the umpire for Napanee, and as usual, was a favorite with both parties.

Firemen's Excursion.

The Napanee Fire Brigade will open the excursion season next week. The New York will be in readiness for the occasion, she arrived here from Mill Point on Wednesday, having completed her repairs, an awning will be attached on the forward part of the boat, making the seating capacity over 600, ad protected from the sun. The steamer leaves Bowey's Dock, foot of Robert street, on Wednesday, the 25th inst., at 6:30 a. m., touching at Mill Point at 7:30, Bath 9:30, Stella Point and Kingston, where excursionists will have ample time to visit the city, barracks, penitentiary, etc. Tickets for the round trip, from Napanee and Mill Point 50 cents, Bath 25 cents. Children half price.

Our Volunteers.

A Valuable Work of Reference.

Rand's New York City Business Directory For 1877. The second volume of this valuable and indispensable work has just been issued by the Publishers, Messrs. Walter Hough & Co., of 3 Park Place, New York. Napsins or expense has been spared in the production of the present volume, to make it complete and reliable. It is pronounced by the New York city press to be the most complete, attractive, useful and cheapest Business Directory of that city ever issued. In typographical appearance and binding, certainly it is a fine specimen of book-making. It contains over one hundred pages more matter than the last year's volume, which has added largely to the cost of the production of the work, and compelled the Publishers to issue it after only the full cloth bound edition at One Dollar per copy, upon the receipt of which sum they will forward the work to any address in the United States or Canada, by mail, postage prepaid.

TAMWORTH—THE TWELFTH OF JULY.

Tamworth was densely crowded on that peculiar day. It is said there were more people here on that day, than ever were seen here before, and probably more than will be for a while again.

The town was neatly decorated, and abundantly provided, and every token of welcome to strangers was evidently manifested. It was a day of rejoicing. All seemed to be enlivened by the charming sound of music by various instruments, which followed the waving banners of freedom, leading the various lodges along the streets. Shortly after dinner, the grand procession proceeded to Helem's grove, not to the field of battle, but to advocate the glorious hiding of liberty. Just then, the courage of many seemed to give way, they turned back to the town; because there was every appearance of rain, yet, an immense crowd stood the ground steadfast, and the clouds were kept from letting down their contents in this locality, until this prominent part of the day's proceedings was over. Then the rain came freely. A number of gentlemen took their seats on the stand, "ready to speak a word in due season" on the glorious topic of the day, if called upon. Among the many, several of the sons of Levi were seen. The Rev. A. Dawson, opened the meeting by reading the 1st chap. of the book of the prophet Nahum, prayer was offered by the Rev. ————Then the Grand Chaplain took for his text the 7th and 8th verses in the chapter which was previously read. He dwelt much upon the evidences which were both in ancient and modern history to prove the statement in his text, and especially the event which was the pre-eminent topic of the day, was greatly observed. After the closing of the sermon, several gentlemen were called upon to speak, last of all Mr. Roe, Napanee. He spoke well up in the rights of man, not merely as a member of Orangeism or a protestant, or a Roman Catholic; but as a member of the community at large. Why should not every man enjoy the liberty of conscience, and as a loyal subject be protected in this enjoyment? He was loudly applauded by the people, yet I understand that there was an odd one among the many that felt rather peevish on the occasion, which is often the case in such gatherings. This spirit frequently gives rise to discord. It is the canker of every society, yes of the community in general. It is a corroding malady, it eats its seats on, till the vital sap is wasted. Why this evil be natural and hereditary, we cannot tell, but strange to say, many are those who are affected by the unfortunate disease. There are few around here since the Twelfth, there is a dark frown on their countenances, there is not the usual smile playing on the cheek, which are sure symptoms of the evil in the constitutions. Facts are strong and stubborn things! To think of warty where this evil presides would be absurd, as well look for it in a den of asps or jackalls. Is this malady curable? In answer, it is very hard to say, because the patient never seeks for a physician. They are so bound by the

A Clergyman Sentenced to P Servitude.

At the Central Criminal Court, London Richard Marsh Watson, who ple guilty last session to a charge of sending a threatening letter to a lady at Bath manding money, with menaces, brought up for judgement. The pris was a clerk in holy orders, and he married the sister of the prosecutrix. lead, of course, to an intimacy with whole of the family, and in 1864 prisoner seduced prosecutrix, his v sister, and the result of their intir was the birth of a child. After this the prisoner appeared to have persued systematic course of persecution toward the prosecutrix, and by a threat of ex ing what had taken between them, succeeded in obtaining large sums of money. For some time the persecution appeared to have ceased, but in March last he another letter demanding £200 from prosecutrix, and threatened to expose relations that had existed between them if his request was not complied with. Mr. Digby Seymour, in asking for judgement, stated these facts, and said the prisoner appeared to have carried a most horrible system of seduction and that a number of other young women had been victims to his villainy. In case he appeared to have suggested young woman that she should introduce him to some young lady, whom he misled to marry. Among his papers there was found the following document:—

September 23, 187
I, Emily ——— take you Richard Marsh Watson, from this day forth, my wedded husband; and I now swear to love you faithfully during our whole life, and that I will lawfully marry as soon as you are free, and that in meantime I shall love you as your lawful wife; and I swear this is the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.
(Signed),
Emily

The prisoner was sentenced to two years' penal servitude.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

A shocking accident has occurred at Botley road railway station, near Cr

the death of young Basilie Crevier on the 12th inst., in addition to what appeared in the papers on that date. In company with Mr. S. Wright, foreman, he was engaged in repairing the M. Tel., Co's Line four miles south of Tamworth. About five o'clock in the afternoon, Wright and deceased were together, while the latter was trimming the brush from a tree in contact with the wire. The knife being attached to a long pole in the hands of Crevier, Wright was just giving directions, what small limbs to cut, as the flash came. Wright fell, but soon recovered and saw Crevier lying on his back in the ditch, beside him, with his eyes fixed. He fanned him with his hat and tried to bring him too, in about ten minutes he recovered a little and remarked "take me away out of this" in English, which was very unusual as he always spoke in French, even if asked a question in English, he then expired. After the accident the body was carried to the residence of Mr. Robt. Reid (farmer) at Hamah's corners, where they kindly assisted our foreman in every possible way to restore life. Mr. Reid drove the body to Napanee. No blame can be attached to the Company as the accident was purely accidental. The poles where shattered, and the wires melted in several places, by the flash which killed Crevier and damaged the instruments in Croydon and Tamworth. The young man was the sole support of a widowed mother. His remains were forwarded to his home at St. Anne's P. Q., by the midnight train.

Cricket—Return Match.

The return match between Belleville and Napanee was played on the latter's ground, on Monday. It will be seen from the score that Napanee was badly beaten in the first innings. The fielding of Belleville was excellent, but some ridiculous decisions of their umpire, created a deal of dissatisfaction. A little previous "reading up" in Cricket rules would have been beneficial to this gentleman. The Belleville Intelligencer says:—"The strongest eleven ought to have been sent, but this was not done, most of the team who were selected to go to Napanee belonging to the second eleven." The above may be true, with the exception of Clarke and Pedan, two of the most effective players in the Belleville club, and who, doubtless, turned the scale. Mr. Jno. Bowey was the umpire for Napanee, and as usual, was a favorite with both parties.

A Valuable Work of Reference.

Rand's New York City Business Directory For 1877. The second volume of this valuable and indispensable work has just been issued by the Publishers, Messrs. Walter Hough & Co., of 3 Park Place, New York. No pains or expense has been spared in the production of the present volume, to make it complete and reliable. It is pronounced by the New York city press to be the most complete, attractive, useful and cheapest Business Directory of that city ever issued. In typographical appearance and binding, certainly it is a fine specimen of book-making. It contains over one hundred pages more matter than the last year's volume, which has added largely to the cost of the production of the work, and compelled the Publishers to issue hereafter only the full cloth bound edition at One Dollar per copy, upon the receipt of which sum they will forward the work to any address in the United States or Canada, by mail, postage prepaid.

He was loudly applauded by the people, yet I understand that there was an old one among the many that felt rather peevish on the occasion, which is often the case in such gatherings. This spirit frequently gives rise to discord. It is the canker of every society, yes of the community in general. It is a corroding malady, it eats in its seats on, till the vital sap is wasted. Whether this evil be natural and hereditary, we cannot tell, but strange to say, many are those who are affected by the unfortunate disease. There are few around here since the Twelfth, there is a dark frown on their countenances, there is not the usual smile playing on the cheek, which are sure symptoms of the evil in the constitutions. Facts are strong and stubborn things! To think of unity where this evil presides would be absurd, as well look for it in a den of asps or jackalls. Is this malady curable? In answer, it is very hard to say, because the patient never seeks for a physician. They are so bound by the ties of tradition, and are all so wise and holy in their own estimation, that even a modest hint to the prevailing disease, would be certain to give provocation. However allow me to advance the following hints to the free and the generous. Constitutional peculiarity is hard to be overcome, it is like constitutional weakness, that requires time and tonics to strengthen it, but by a quiet, peaceable, forbearing process, much might be done. Let all causes of provocation be removed that can be so. Let taunting language cease. Take upon you the task of reformers, rather than revilers. Let your applications be in small doses at the time for to secure digestion. Patience will do more to effect a cure, than a direct, or a rash application. Be sure to persevere without growing weary in well doing, and if you succeed in rooting out the deceitful malady, you will deserve more genuine applause than Alexander when he had conquered a world. If there be one practical precept which we could wish to be printed in starchy characters on the dark face of our nightly sky, written in sunbeams on the tablet of the earth, and uttered both night and day in voices from the heavens, that the attention of men might be irresistibly turned to it, and their hearts unavoidably impressed by it, this is one. Forbearing on another in love. This one short precept, univer-

The Weights and Measures Act.

The Monetary Times thus summarizes the provisions of the Weights and Measures Act:—

Among the Acts passed latest by the Dominion House at its recent session, is the one assented to on 27th April, providing for the amendment of that passed four years ago, relating to Weights and Measures. The Imperial bushel measure, containing eight Imperial or standard gallons, is now the standard measure of capacity for commodities sold by dry measure; and from this all other measures require to be computed, these forming parts or multiples of the standard bushel. It is also provided that after the date named, the standard bushel thus established shall be held, unless otherwise stipulated, to be the measure agreed to as between the parties to any sale of goods by "dry measure." It is quite permissible to use the wine gallons of 231 cubic inches, or the Winchester bushel of 2150 42-100 cubic inches, according to special understanding between the buyer and seller, and the ratio which these bear to the standard is six wine gallons, equal to five standard gallons while 1,031 Winchester bushel equals one of the Imperial.

The cental system has by this Act been adopted. The "hundred-weight" and the ton are by it declared to consist of one hundred pounds averdupois, and two thousand pounds averdupois, respectively, instead of the "English hundred" one hundred and twelve pounds, or the "long ton" of twenty-two hundred and forty, which it was previously optional to use. The hundred pound weight with its multiples and parts are now the Standard for heavy goods. And it is provided that any duties or tolls legally imposed shall be levied on the ton or hundred weight thus established. Public weighers and measurers are required to use the standard of weight here laid down under twenty dollars penalty; and the amounts of all contracts of sales of goods sold by weight must be expressed by centals and parts of the cental.

Grain, vegetables, and fruits, however, when sold by the bushel, have the weight of each regulated according to the following table; and contracts for these articles will be held by law to mean not a bushel by measure, but by weight, unless otherwise agreed upon, as under:

Wheat, sixty pounds.
Indian Corn, fifty-six pounds.
Rye, fifty-six pounds.
Peas, sixty pounds.
Barley, forty-eight pounds.
Oats, thirty-four pounds.
Beans, sixty pounds.
Clover Seed, sixty pounds.
Timothy Seed, forty-eight pounds.
Buckwheat, forty-eight pounds.
Flax Seed, fifty pounds.
Hemp Seed, forty-four pounds.
Blue Grass Seed, fourteen pounds.
Castor Beans, forty pounds.
Potatoes, turnips, carrots, parsnips, beets, and onions, sixty pounds.
Salt, fifty six pounds.
Dried Apples, twenty-two pounds.
Dried Peaches, thirty-three pounds.
Malt, thirty-six pounds.

The twenty-sixth section of the Act, as amended, provides that "within two months of the expiration of one year" from their first verification and stamping, and so on year by year, all measures, weights and weighing machines are to be again inspected, and a new certificate obtained. This may seem troublesome, and one naturally remarks, must be expensive, but it is provided that the subsequent inspection will cost only one-fourth the regular fee, so long as no deficiency be found in the merchant's weights or measures. Makers of scales or measures do not require to have them stamped so long as they are lying in his warehouse unsold or unused.

The penalty for the use of unstamped measures of from five to fifty dollars for

The twenty-sixth section of the Act, as amended, provides that "within two months of the expiration of one year" from their first verification and stamping, and so on year by year, all measures, weights and weighing machines are to be again inspected, and a new certificate obtained. This may seem troublesome, and one naturally remarks, must be expensive, but it is provided that the subsequent inspection will cost only one-fourth the regular fee, so long as no deficiency be found in the merchant's weights or measures. Makers of scales or measures do not require to have them stamped so long as they are lying in his warehouse unsold or unused.

The penalty for the use of unstamped measures of from five to fifty dollars for each offence, and the confiscation and breaking up of the measures. Any one found with unstamped measures or weights in his possession is liable to fifty dollars fine for the first offence and one hundred dollars for the second; while any person aggrieved by the use of any measure or weight which has not the inspector's stamp, may recover treble damages and costs.

Lace Curtains

A correspondent of the Inter Ocean has a mode of doing up lace curtains which is very simple and easy.

First, shake the dust well out of the lace, then put in tepid water, in which a little soda has been dissolved, and wash at once with the hands, in several waters if necessary, to make them free from dust and color. Then blue the rinsing water, as the lace looks less blue when hung against the light, then, having pinned down the sheets in a vacant airy room, pin on the curtains very closely, stretched to exactly the size they were before being wet. In a few hours they will be dry and ready to put up at the windows. The whole process of washing and pinning down should occupy as little time as possible, as lace will shrink more than any other cotton goods when long wet. Above all, it should not be allowed to "soak" from the mistaken idea that it is washed more easily. Nor should it ever be ironed, as it looks quite fresh and new if properly dried.

After having the supervision of the washing and drying of seventy-five pairs of lace curtains for several years, we conceived a way by which the tedious labor of pinning the lace to the floor could be avoided. We ordered from the carpenter a set of frames, very like the old-fashioned quilting frames, thickly studded along the inside with the smaller size of galvanized tenter-hooks in which to fasten the lace, with holes and wooden pins to vary the size to suit the different size of curtains. When lace curtains are to be washed they should be measured before being wet, and stretched in the frame to that size to prevent shrinking. It takes but a few moments to fasten the curtains, and five or six can be put in, one by one, and all dried at once. The cost of them was $1—the price of having one good pair done away from home and made very ten for, and even ready after a year or two. They have proved a great saving of labor and time a thorough success, and we find them a most satisfactory aid in our system of domestic economy.

Cure for Consumption

A correspondent of an English medical journal furnishes the following recipe as a new cure for consumption. Put a dozen whole lemons in cold water and boil until soft (not too soft), roll and squeeze until the juice is all extracted, sweeten the juice enough to be palatable, then drink. Use as many as a dozen a day. Should they cause pain or looseness of the bowels, lessen the quantity and use five or six a day until better; then begin and use a dozen again. By the time you have used five or six dozen you will begin to gain strength and have an appetite. Of course, as you get better, the number of lemon consumed persons in the city and 30,000 in the State who consent to emigrate.

By the laws of Florida no man who has lost an arm or a leg, no matter how or when, or from what cause, can be taxed for any business he may enter into, always excepting the liquor business.

Follow these directions and we know that you will never regret it if there is any help for you. Only keep it up faithfully. We know of two cases where both of the patients were given up by the physicians, and were in the last stages of consumption, yet both were cured by using lemons according to the directions we have stated. One lady, in particular, was bedridden and very low; had tried everything that money could procure, but all in vain, when, to please a friend, she was finally persuaded to use the lemons. She began to use them in February, and in April she weighed 140 pounds. She is a well woman to-day, and likely to live as long as any of us.

In the end he left the doctor's hands, cured as was believed, but ever since he has been troubled with a constant affection of the eye. Having consulted an oculist, the conclusion was arrived at that there must be something in the eyeball itself. Barry Sullivan consented to undergo the necessary operation for testing this theory. His eyeball was cut open, and from it there was taken an eyelash, which had been thrust in at the point of the sword.

The Hindus are endeavouring to introduce their religion into Australia, and Hindu missionaries have been for a year labouring in that country. One of them, Kaba Surappa, reports to the society that sent him on the condition in which he finds the Australians. The things he particularly notices are that drunkenness and profanity are frightfully common, that avarice, poverty and deep ignorance are the leading characteristics of the people, and that, as he thinks, the Christian religion degenerates instead of elevates. He adds, severely, that not much can be expected of a religion the founder of which drank wine when on earth, and the priests of which relate stories of improbable miracles.

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappeared.

ST. ANNE'S, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.

Dear Sir—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 25 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and bearing it down, with continual drooping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite. The next morning I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and arduous labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely to God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,

On the 1st of July, 1877, we will send to the Boys or Girls sending the Largest number of orders, up to that date, one nice Pocket Bible.

For the information of Christian generally, it may be briefly stated that this Institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, Tracts, Books, &c., &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any Particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Depository of Boston, under the care of the well known DR. CULLY.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to persons and places where they are needed as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to cooperate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others, who may be added, who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

 T. J. B. HARDING.
 In Being desiring that others may know some of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you that I have been cured of Catarrh, which had been out of health for about five years. I employed three or four different doctors, and tried all medicine without receiving any permanent benefit. Continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I came so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe nervous and rheumatic pains, and when the shoulders, with very lame back, and lay in my right lung as though there was a weight on it, with continual dropping in the chest, and upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I came to take your Catarrh Remedy, one of the bottles cured my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, which I have been engaged in the season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,

LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN
 I have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure of all diseases of the Nervous System, Mental and Physical Impairments, and the various diseases resulting from excess.
 Price, in a sealed envelope, only one cent, postage stamps.
 celebrated author of this admirable treatise, early demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that all diseases of the nervous system are radically cured without the aid of any internal medicine or the application of any life; pointing out a mode of cure at once certain and effectual, by means of which sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, cure himself cheaply, rapidly and safely.
 This Lecture should be in the hands of youth and every man in the land.

Since her marriage, which was affair in w nearly eight years old,
Brown had never passed a Christmas

had often been noted by the very soul craved the festivities of Brown uttered his unavailing compl-

she did not, perhaps, quite believe that he said of his own condition.

My Neighbor's Wife.

Hark! Hark to my neighbor's flute!
You powder'd slave, that ox, that ass are his.
Hark to his wheezy pipe! My neighbor is
A worthy sort of a brute.

My tuncful neighbor's rich--has horses, lands
A wife (confound his flute--a handsome wife!)
Her love must give a gusto to his life.
See yonder--there she stands!

She turns, she gazes; she has lustrous eyes.
A throat like Juno, and Aurora's arms--
Per Bacco! what a paragon of charms!
My neighbor's drawn a prize.

Yet, somehow, life's a nuisance with it woes.
Sin and disease--and that eternal preaching;
We've suffer'd from our pious teaching--
We suffer--goodness knows!

How vain the wealth that breeds its own Vexation.
Yet few appear to care to quite forego it!
Then weariness of life (and many know it)
Isn't a glad sensation.

And therefore, neighbor mine, without a sting
I contemplate thy fields, thy house, thy flocks;
I covet not thy man, thy ass, thy ox,
Thy flute, thy--anything.

A VERY FUNNY STORY.

BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

CHAPTER I.

MRS. BROWN'S SUCCESS.

Every one remembers the severity of the Christmas of 187--. I will not designate the year more closely, lest I should enable those who are too curious to investigate the circumstances of this story, and I inquire into details which I do not intend to make known. That winter, however, was especially severe, and the cold of the last two days of December was more felt, I think, in Paris than in any part of England. It may, indeed, be doubted whether there is any town in any country in which thoroughly bad weather is more allicting than in the French capital. Snow and hail seem to be colder there and are certainly less warm than in London. And then there is a feeling among visitors to Paris that Paris ought to be gay; that gaiety, prettiness, and loveliness are its aims, as money, commerce, and general business are the aims of London, which, with its outside sombre darkness, does often seem to want an excuse for its ugliness. But on this occasion, at this Christmas of 187--, Paris was neither gay, nor pretty, nor lively. You could not walk the streets without being milk-deep, not in snow, but in a fluid that had become slush; and there was a falling throughout the day and night of the 23rd of December, a succession of damp, half-frozen abominations from the sky which made it almost impossible for men and women to go about their business.

It was at ten o'clock on that evening that an English lady and gentleman arrived at the Grand Hotel on the Boulevard des Italiens. As I have reasons for concealing the names of this married couple, I will call them Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Now I wish it to be understood that in all the general affairs of life this to be taken in by false pretences. She observed that he ate a good dinner on his way to Paris, and that he took a small glass of cognac with a complete relish, which a man really suffering from bronchitis surely would not do. So she persevered, and brought him into Paris, late in the evening, in the midst of all that slush and snow. Then, as they sat down to supper, she thought that he did speak harshly, and her loving feminine heart began to misgive her.

But this now was, at any rate, clear to her--that he could no be worse off by going on to London than he would be should he remain in Paris. If a man is to be ill, he had better be ill in the bosom of his family than at a hotel. What comfort could he have, what relief, in that huge barrack? As for the cruelty of the weather, London could not be worse than Paris, and then she thought she had heard that sea air is good for a sore throat. In that bed-room which had been allotted to them au quatrieme they could not even get a decent fire. It would in every way be wrong now to forgo the great Christmas gathering when nothing could be gained by staying in Paris.

She had perceived that as her husband became really ill, he became more tractable and less disputatious. Immediately after that little glass of cognac he had declared that he would be--if he would go beyond Paris, and as she began to fear that, after all, everything would have been done in vain. But as they went down to supper between ten and eleven he was more subdued, and merely remarked that this journey would, he was sure, be the death of him. It was half past eleven when they got back to their bedroom, and then he seemed to speak with good sense, and also with much real apprehension. "If I can't get something to relieve me, I know I shall never make my way on," he said. It was intended that they should leave the hotel at half past five the next morning, so as to arrive at Stratford, traveling by the tidal train, at half past seven on Christmas-eve. The early hour, the long journey, the infamous weather, the prospect of that horrid gulf between Boulogne and Folkestone, would have been as nothing to Mrs. Brown, had it not been for that settled look of anguish which had now pervaded her husband's face. "If you don't find something to relieve me, I shall never live through it," he said again, sinking back into the questionable comfort of a Parisian hotel armchair.

"But, my dear, what can I do?" she asked, almost in tears, standing over him and gazing at him. He was a thin, genteel-looking man, with a fine long soft brown beard, but certainly a genteel-looking man. She loved him dearly, and in her softer moods was apt to spoil him with her caresses. "What can I do, my dear? You know I would do any thing if I could. Get into bed, my pet, and be warm, and then to-morrow morning you will be all right." At this moment he was preparing himself for his bed, way to the saloon, in order that she might pick it up? But the porter did more than that, and accompanied her to the room in which she had supped.

Here, of course, there was a prolonged, and, it need hardly be said, a vain search. The good natured man insisted on emptying an enormous receptacle of soiled table napkins, and on turning them over, one by one, in order that the lady's property might be found. The lady stood by unhappy, but still patient, and as the man was stooping to his work, her eyes were on the mustard pot. There it was, capable of containing enough to blister the throats of a score of sufferers. She edged off a little toward it while the man was busy, trying to persuade her that he would surely forgive her if she took the mustard and told him the whole story. But the descent from her Juno bearing would have been too great! She must have owned, not only to the quest for mustard, but also to a fib--and she could not do it. The porter was at last of opinion that madame must have made a mistake, and madame acknowledged that she was afraid it was so.

What a longing, lingering eye, with an eye turned back, oh! so sadly, to the great jar she left the room, the porter leading the way. She assured him that she would find it by herself, but he would not leave her till he had put her on to the proper passage. The journey seemed to be longer now even than before; but as she ascended the many stairs she swore to herself that she would not even yet be balked of her object. Should her husband want comfort for his poor throat, and the comfort be there within her reach, and he not have it? She counted every stair as she went up, and marked every turn wall. She was sure now that she would know the way and that she could return to the room without fault. She would go back to the saloon. Even though the man should encounter her again, she would go boldly forward and seize the remedy which her poor husband so grievously required.

"Ah, yes," she said, when the porter told her that her room, No. 338, was in the corridor which they had then reached, "I knew it all now. I am so much obliged. Do not come a step further." He was anxious to accompany her to the very door, but she stood in the passage, and prevailed. He lingered a while--naturally. Unluckily she had brought no money with her, and could not give him the two-franc piece which he had earned. Nor could she fetch it from her room, feeling that were she to return to her husband without the mustard, no second attempt would be possible. The disappointed man turned on his heel at last, and made his way down stairs and along the passage. It seemed to her to be almost an eternity while she listened to his still audible footsteps. She had gone on, creeping noiselessly up to the very door of her room, and there she stood, shading the candle in her hand till she thought the man had wandered vard des Italiens. As I have reasons for concealing the names of this married couple, I will call them Mr. and Mrs.

Brown. Now I wish it to be understood that in all the general affairs of life this gentleman and this lady lived happily together, with all the amenities which should bind a husband and a wife. Mrs.
Brown was one of a wealthy family, and Mr. Brown, when he married her, had ing his bread. Nevertheless she had at once yielded to him when he expressed a desire to spend the winters of their life
in the south of France; and he, though he was by disposition somewhat idle, and
but little prone to the energetic occupations of life, would generally allow himself, at other periods of the year, to be carried hither and thither by her, whose more robust nature delighted in the excitement of traveling. But on this occasion there had been a little difference between them.

Early in December an intimation had reached Mrs. Brown at Pau that on the coming Christmas there was to be a great gathering of all the Thompsons in the Thompson family hall at Stratford-le-Bow, and that she, who had been a Thompson, was desired to join the party with her husband. On this occasion, her only sister was desirous of introducing to the family generally a most excellent young man to whom she recently became engaged. The Thompsons—the real name, however, in fact concealed—were a numerous and thriving people. There were uncles and cousins and brothers who had done well in the world, and who were likely to do better still. One had lately been returned to Parliament for the Essex Flats and was at the time of writing
a conspicuous member of the brilliant Conservative majority. It was partly in triumph at this success that the great Christmas gathering of the Thompsons was to be held, and it had not been expressed by the ladies present that should Mrs. Brown and her husband, fail to join the family on this great occasion, she and he would be regarded as being but faint-hearted Thompsons.

Since her marriage, which was an affair in w nearly eight years ago, Mrs.
Brown had never passed Christmas in England. The desirability of doing so had often been mooted by her. Her very soul craved the festive, the merry and merriment. There had been meetings of the Thompsons in the Thompson Hall, to each of which she had been invited, not as a party guest, but as a family one, which was a different matter. More than once she had expressed a wish to see old Christmas in the old house and among the old people, and her husband had always pointed out her weakness about his throat and chest as
a reason for remaining in the south delights of Pau. Year after year she had yielded, and now this long summer had which had now pervaded her husband's chair.

"But, my dear, what can I do?" she asked, almost in tears, standing over him and gazing him. He was a thin, gentle-looking man, with a fine long soft

ment he was preparing himself for his bed,
and she was assisting him, and put him
in beneath the bedclothes.

"I'll tell you what you can do," he said, very absently. His voice was so low that she could hardly hear him.
So she crept close to him, and bent over him. She would do any thing if he would only say what. Then he told her what was his plan. Down in the saloon
he had seen a large jar of mustard standing on a side-board. As he left the room
he had observed that this had not been withdrawn with the other appurtenances
of the meal. If she could manage to find her way down there, taking with her a handkerchief folded for the purpose, and
if she could then appropriate a part of
the contents of that jar, and, returning
with her prize, apply it to his throat, he thought that he could get some relief, so
that he might be able to leave his bed
the next morning at five. "But I am afraid it will be very disagreeable for you
to go down all alone at this time of night," he croaked out in a piteous whisper.

"Of course I'll go," said she. "I don't mind going in the least." "Nobody will
bite me," and she at once began to fold
a clean handkerchief. I won't be two minutes, my darling; and if there is a grain of mustard in the house, I'll have
it on your chest almost immediately." She was a woman not easily cowed, and the journey down into the saloon was nothing to her. Before she went she tucked the clothes carefully up to his
ears, and then she started.

To run along the first corridor till she
came to a flight of stairs was easy enough,
and easy enough to descend them. Then
there was another corridor and another
flight, and a third corridor and a third
flight, and she began to think that she was wrong. She found herself in a part of the hotel which she had not hitherto
visited, and soon discovered by looking through an open door or two that she
had found her way among a set of private sitting-rooms which she had not seen before. Then she tried to make her way back, up the same stairs and through the
same passages, so that she might start
again. She was beginning to think that she had lost herself all together, and that she would be able to find neither the saloon nor her bedroom, when she happily
met the night-porter. She was dressed
in a loose white dressing-gown, with a white net over her loose hair, and with white worsted slippers. I ought, perhaps, to have described her personal appearance sooner. She was a large woman, with a commanding bust, thought
by some to be handsome, after the manner of June. But with strangers there was a certain severity of manner about
her—a fortification, as it were, of her vir-

not even yet be balked of her object.
Should her husband want comfort for his poor throat, and the comfort be there within her reach, and he not have it?
She counted every stair as she went up,
and marked every turn well. She was sure now that she would know the way and that she could return to the room without fault. She would go back to the saloon. Even though the man should encounter her again, she would go boldly forward and seize the remedy
which her poor husband so grievously required.

"Ah, yes," she said, when the porter told her that her room, No. 338, was in the corridor which they had then reached. "I know it all now. I am so much obliged." Do not come a step further." He was anxious to accompany her to the very door, but she stood in the passage and prevailed. He lingered a while—naturally. Unluckily she had brought no money with her, and could not give him the two-franc piece which he had earned. Nor could she fetch it from her room, feeling that were she to return to her husband without the mustard, no second attempt would be possible. The disappointed man turned on his heel at last, and made his way down to her to be almost an eternity while she listened to his still audible footsteps.

She had gone on, creeping noiselessly up to the very door of her room, and there
she stood, shading the candle in her hand till she thought the man had wandered away into some further corner of that endless building. Then she turned once more and retraced her steps.

CONTINUED.

Value of Knowing How to Swim.

Hanging in the shrouds of a sinking
ship on a wild November afternoon, the
engine-room flooded from the leak, the
steam-pumps not able to work, my back
tortured beyond endurance with hard labor at the levers of the hand pump, the
deck swept by the bursting seas, a wild
and angry sky above, the sea shore perfectly horrible in the tempest of its waves
and the thunder of the surf that went rolling and charging by squallous billows
over half a mile of low sandy bottom, I asked myself whether, if the ship broke up, I could manage the undertow—at merciless drag backward of the sea, the topmast wave washing the swimmer illusionally toward the shore, the maddest sucking him down and out. I said to myself an emphatic "Yes!" But the experiment was signed me, and I got ashore
next morning in a life boat. Ever since that awful hour and night, I have had a sincere respect for the science and art of
swimming, in which next to God, then
rested all my hope and trust.

But before we talk about fighting an
undertow in a wicked sea-way, let us discuss the principles and method of swimming. To drown in a river, with the shore only a few yards away, where any dog or donkey would reach the land, must involve a feeling of personal humiliation as well as despair. To be self-trustworthy is the first thing in moments
of danger; but the art of swimming has
a high value in the saving of other lives
and is, besides a luxury and accomplishment, worth the having for the mere fun
of the thing. In our civilization swimming is an acquired accomplishment. It is understood to be a natural
function with nearly all kinds of animals,
hogs and humanity being the leading exceptions. The inability to swim is in all cases a defect of education. The true
plan to follow, when safety is the call, is
to swim with everything below the chin
well down under water, the head well
back and resting centrally in the floating power of the lungs. But what will you do when your comrade is stirred out and drowning? That depends. If he is cool
and reliable, get in front of him, let him
place his hands on your hips, that you
shoulders, and you can carry him quite a distance. That supposes that both parties,
rescued and rescuer, understand fair play.
The weaker party is the one that ought to drown, if he shows any disposition to down his friend by a miserable, cowardly death clutch at the only floating

 Brown had never passed a Christmas in England. The desirability of doing so
 had often been mooted by her. Her very soul longed for the festivities of holly and mince-pies. There had been meetings of the Thompsons at Thompson Hall, though meetings not of significant, notes important to the family,
 as this one which was now to be celebrated. More than once had she expressed a wish to see old Christmas again in the old house and in the old faces. But her husband had always, provided a certain
 weakness about his throat and chest as
 a reason for remaining among the delights of Pau. Year after year she had yielded, and now this long summons had come.

It was not without considerable trouble that she had induced Mr. Brown to come as far as Paris. Most unwillingly had he left Pau; and then, twice on his journey—both at Bordeaux and Tours—he had made an attempt to return. From the first moment he had married, his throat, and when at last he had consented to make the journey, he had stipulated for sleeping at these two towns and at Paris. Mrs. Brown, who, with no slightest feeling of fatigue, could have made the journey from Pau to Stratford without stopping, had consented to every thing, so that they might be at Thompson Hall on Christmas eve. When Mr.
 Brown uttered his unavailing complaints
 at the first two towns at which they stopped,
 she did not, perhaps, quite believe all that he said of his own condition. We know how prone the strong are to suspect the weakness of the weak—as the weak are to be disgusted by the strength of the strong. There were, perhaps, a few words between them on the journey,
 but the result had hitherto been in favor of the lady. She had succeeded in bringing Mr. Brown as far as Paris.

Had the occasion been less important,
 no doubt she would have yielded. The weather had been bad even when they left Pau, but as they had made their way northward it had become worse and still worse. As they left Tours, Mr. Brown, in a hoarse whisper, had declared his conviction that the journey would kill him. Mrs. Brown, however, had unfortunately noticed half an hour before that he had scolded the waiter of the score of an overcharged frank or two with a loud and clear voice. Had she really believed that there was danger, or even suffering, she would have yielded; but no woman is satisfied in such a matter

of the meal. If she could manage to find
 her way down there, taking with her a
 handkerchief folded for the purpose, and
 if she could then appropriate a part of
 the contents of that jar, and, returning wither prize, apply it to his throat, he thought that he could get some relief, so
 that he might be able to leave his bed
 the next morning at five. "But I am
 afraid it will be very disagreeable for you
 to get down all alone at this time of
 night," he croaked out in a piteous whis-
 per.

"Of course I'll go," said she. "I don't mind going in the least." "Nobody will
 bite me," and she at once began to fold
 a clean handkerchief. I won't be two minutes, my darling; and if there is a
 grain of mustard in the house, I'll have
 it on your chest almost immediately." She was a woman not easily cowed, and the journey down into the saloon was nothing to her. Before she went she tucked the clothes carefully up to his
 ears, and then she started.

To run along the first corridor till she
 came to a flight of stairs was easy enough,
 and easy enough to descend them. Then
 there was another corridor and another
 flight, and a third corridor and a third
 flight, and she began to think that she
 was wrong. She found herself in a part
 of the hotel which she had not hitherto
 visited, and soon discovered by looking
 through an open door or two that she
 had found her way among a set of private
 sitting-rooms which she had not seen before. Then she tried to make her way
 back, up the same stairs and through the
 same passages, so that she might start
 again. She was beginning to think that she had lost herself altogether, and that she would be able to find neither the saloon nor her bedroom, when she happily
 met the night-porter. She was dressed
 in a loose white dressing-gown, with a
 white net over her loose hair, and with
 white worsted slippers. I ought, perhaps, to have described her personal appearance sooner. She was a large woman, with a commanding bust, thought
 by some to be handsome, after the manner of Juno. But with strangers there was a certain severity of manner about
 her—a fortification, as it were, of her virtue against all possible attacks—a declared determination to maintain, at all points, the beautiful character of a British matron, which, much as it had been appreciated at Thompson Hall, had met with some ill-natured criticism among French men and women. At Pau she had been called La Fiere Anglaise. The name had reached her own ears and those of her husband. He had been much annoyed, but she had taken it in good part —had, indeed, been somewhat proud of the title, and had endeavored to live up to it. With her husband she could, on occasion, be soft, but she was of opinion that with other men a British matron should be stern. She was now greatly in want of assistance; but, nevertheless,
 when she met the porter she remembered her character. "I have lost my way wandering through these horrid passages," she said, in her severest tone. This was in answer to some question from him—some question to which her reply was given very slowly. Then when he asked where madame wished to go, she paused, again thinking what destination
 she would announce. No doubt the man could take her back to her bedroom, but if so, the mustard must be renounced,
 and with the mustard, as she now feared,
 all hope of reaching Thompson Hall on Christmas eve. But she, though she was in many respects a brave woman, did not dare to tell the man that she was prowling about the hotel in order that she might make a midnight raid upon the mustard pot. She paused, therefore, for a moment, that she might collect her thoughts, erecting her head as she did so in her best Juno fashion, till the porter was lost in admiration. Thus she gained time to fabricate a tale. She had, she said, dropped her handkerchief under the supper table; would he show her the deck swept by the hurrying seas, a wild and angry sky above, the sea shore

 perfectly horrible in the telegraph of its waves
 and the thunder of the surf that went rolling and charging by squallions of billows
 over half a mile of low sandy bottom, I
 asked myself whether, if the ship broke up,
 I could manage the undertow. At merciless drag back ward of the sea, the topmost wave washing the swimmer il-lusively toward the shore, the undertow
 sucking him down and out. I said to myself an emphatic "Yes!" But the experiment was spared me, and I got ashore
 next morning in a life boat. Ever since
 that awful hour and night, I have had a
 sincere respect for the science and art of
 swimming, in which next to God, then
 rested all my hope and trust.

But before we talk about fighting an
 undertow in a wicked sea-way, let us discuss the principles and method of swimming. To drown in a river, with the shore only a few yards away, when any dog or donkey would reach the land,
 must involve a feeling of personal humiliation as well as despair. To be self-trustworthy is the first thing in moments
 of danger; but the art of swimming has
 a high value in the saving of other lives
 and is, besides a luxury and accomplishment, worth the having for the mere fun
 of the thing. In our civilization swimming is an acquired accomplishment.
 It is understood to be a natural
 function with nearly all kinds of animals,
 hogs and humanity being the leading exceptions. The inability to swim is in all cases a defect of education. The true
 plan to follow, when safety is the call, is
 to swim with everything below the chin
 well down under water, the head well
 back and resting centrally on the floating
 power of the lungs. But what will you do when your comrade is sure to out and drowning? That depends. If he is cool
 and reliable, get in front of him, let him
 place his hands on your hips (not your shoulders) and you can carry him quite a distance. That supposes that both parties,
 rescued the rescuer, understand fair play.
 The weaker party is the one that ought to drown, he shows any disposition to drown, his friend by a miserable, cowardly
 death clutch at the only floating thing around him. In the case of the death clutch, go to the bottom with your man and leave him there. There may be an unpleasant wrestle, but the real drowning man is ready to quit his prey, when he strikes bottom. The better man has his right to come to the surface and swim ashore.

But in a considerable swimming experience, and some rescues, there comes one absolute rule: Never face a drowning man. He welcomes rescue so eagerly that he will hang you around the neck and take you down. The safest and the best thing to do is to get behind him, and,
 and unless you are left handed, put your left hand under his right arm-pit. The lift you give him will be enough in ordinary water. He can be coaxed to help himself, and if he is a reasonable being you can bring him to shore. If he is insane with fright, recollect that you are both prudent and heroic. Get away from him, clutch his axle with one hand, and tow him ashore. If the bark is near, he is not likely to drown on the way. If he does, it is not your fault. But a brave swimmer is master of his element.

I once saw two young fellows rescue a drowning comrade in a way that was remarkable for its neatness. The fellow was in mid-stream, cramped and exhausted, and barely able to keep afloat. Which was first was never decided, but in the critical moment each was behind him,
 each with a hand under an arm-pit: he was also a dead weight on their hands,
 and they swam him ashore, more dead than alive. It was a struggle, but they were the masters of the situation.—St.

way to the saloon, in order that she might pick it up? But the porter did more than that, and accompanied her to the room in which she had supped.

Here, of course, there was a prolonged, and, it need hardly be said, a vain search. The good natured man insisted on emptying an enormous receptacle of soiled table napkins, and on turning them over one by one, in order that the lady's property might be found. The lady stood by unhappy, but all patient, and as the man was stooping to his work, her eyes was on the mustard pot. There it was, capable of containing enough to blister the throats of a score of sufferers. She edged off a little toward it while the man was busy trying to persuade her that he would surely forgive her if she took the mustard and told him the whole story. But the descent from her Juno bearing would have been too great! She must have owned, not only to the quest for mustard, but also to a fib—and she could not do it. The porter was at last of opinion that madame must have made a mistake, and madame acknowledged that she was afraid it was so.

What a longing, lingeri'g eye, with an eye turned back, oh! so sadly, to the great jar she left the room, the porter leading the way. She assured him that she would find it by herself, but he would not leave her till he had put her on to the proper passage. The journey seemed to be longer now even than before; but as she ascended the many stairs she swore to herself that she would not even yet be balked of her object. Should her husband want comfort for his poor throat, and the comfort be there within her reach, and he not have it? She counted every stair as she went up, and marked every turn wall. She was sure now that she would know the way and that she could return to the room without fault. She would go back to the saloon. Even though the man should encounter her again, she would go boldly forward and seize the remedy which her poor husband so grievously required.

"Ah, yes," she said, when the porter told her that her room, No. 338, was in the corridor which they had then reached, "I know it all now. I am so much obliged. Do not come a step further." He was anxious to accompany her to the very door, but she stood in the passage and prevailed. He lingered a while—naturally. Unluckily she had brought no money with her, and could not give him the two-franc piece which he had earned. Nor could she fetch it from her room, feeling that were she to return to her husband without the mustard, no second attempt would be possible. The disappointed man turned on his heel at last, and made his way down stairs and along the passage. It seemed to her to be almost an eternity while she listened to his still audible footsteps. She had gone on, creeping noiselessly up to the very door of her room, and there she stood, shading the candle in her hand till she thought the man had wandered away into some further corner of that endless building. Then she turned once

The Growth of Children.

SOME INTERESTING STATISTICS FROM THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF BOSTON.

The growth of children has been made the subject of very ingenious and original researches through some 25,000 measurements of the children in the public schools of this city, by Prof. Bowditch, of the Harvard Medical School, and published by the State Board of Health. Prof. Bowditch's figures and tables appear to be the most thoroughgoing and valuable as a basis for scientific deduction in existence. His own summary of the most important results he has obtained is as follows:—

"The growth of children takes place in such a way that until the age of 11 or 12 years boys are both taller and heavier than girls of the same age, but at this period of life girls begin to grow very rapidly, and for the two or three years surpass boys of the same age both height and weight. Boys then acquire and retain a size superior to that of girls, who have now nearly completed their full growth. Children born of American-born parents are in Massachusetts taller and heavier than children of foreign-born parents, a superiority which seems to depend partly on the greater average comfort in which such children live and grow up, and partly upon differences of race or stock. Pupils of American parentage at the public Latin school and other high schools are (apparently for the same reasons) superior in height and weight to the generality of boys of American parentage in the public schools, and to English boys of the non-laboring class attending public schools and universities, the superiority in weight being as a rule more marked than that in height."

It will be seen that several popular delusions of long standing are here dispelled, and the regulation of physical and mental training so much the better guided. The value and importance of the conclusion, however, are diminished by the very fact that they are unique, and other communities have yet no similar statistics. When such basis of comparison has been supplied, the influence of geographical and climatic condition on growing children may be discovered the number of generations in which climatic changes are accomplished, the effect, if any, of the seasons of the year, the comparative effect of city and of country life, &c.—Boston Transcript.

The Hard Struggle.

They looked on poverty with grimace,
The cold sweat on my cheek
I saw him stare at my bed
When wind blew chill and bleak
I watched him crawling to my board,
To snatch my scraps of food,
But never suspecting that I was not once—
To serve myself, but to feed a man
You fought him through the night like a man
That only feared to lose
And bid him hard, and bid him low,
And scorned him to the bone
I was despised—sure of victory,
In battle, although in pain,
With soul serene, and head erect,
And as I will again.

A Mother's Influence.

In the article, the late ex-Senator Pratt was dictating, at the time of his death, this incident in his own life is related:

"It was late in the fall of 1835 that, having collected for the different mercantile firms in Cincinnati about 2,000, I was sent on horseback by the Lawrenceburg road to deliver to the several parties interested the money so collected. As I was passing the branch bank, then recently established on the morning of my departure, the cashier, halted me and brought out some bundles of bank bills folded up and stowed them away in my saddlebags, and handed me letters to the banks to whom the packages were to be delivered. He stunned me by saying they amounted to $20,000. There was a moment, a supreme and critical one, when the voice of the tempter penetrated my ear. It was when I reached the crown of those imperial hills that overlook the Ohio River when approaching Lawrenceburg from the interior. This noble stream was the great artery of commerce at that day, before a Railroad west of Massachusetts had been built. What a gay spectacle it presented, flashing in the bright sunlight, covered with flat-boats, with rafts, with gay steamers ascending and descending, and transporting their passengers in brief time to the Gulf of Mexico, the gateway to all parts of the world. I had but to sell my horse and go aboard one of these with my treasure, and I was absolutely beyond the reach of pursuit. There were no telegraphs then flashing intelligence by an agency more subtle than steam and war outrunning it; no extradition-treaties requiring foreign governments to return the felon. The world was before me, and at the age of twenty-one, with feeble ties connecting me with those left behind, I was in possession of a fortune for those early days. I recall the fact that this thought was a tenant of my mind for a moment, and for a moment only. Bless God, it found no hospitable lodgement any longer. And what think you, gentle reader, were the associate thoughts that came to my rescue? Away, over rivers and mountains, a thousand miles distant, in a humble farm-house, on a bench, an aged mother reading to her boy from the oracles of God."

An American Opinion of the Montreal Outrage.

England guards her interests and her citizens with a jealous eye. If you tread on the coat tail of an Englishman in any part of the civilized or savage world, it strains a seam in the pea-jacket of every sailor in the British navy. If an Englishman is arrested in Brazil, a fleet of war ships is sent down to enquire into it. If an Englishman is insulted on the streets of Madrid, the British Government demands of the Spanish Government an immediate explanation. If an Englishman stubs his toe against the tallest pyramid in Egypt, the Khedive is requested to have a sign placed conspicuously in front of the pyramid, cautioning British subjects against similar mishaps. If an Englishman is taken down with the measles in Hungary, a request is sent from the Royal Health Requiring Society of England, asking that the disease may be abated. Should an English child be

Value of Knowing How to Swim.
Hanging in the shrouds of a sinking
ship on a wild November afternoon, the
engine-room flooded from the leak, the
steam-pumps not able to work, my back
tortured beyond endurance with hard
labor at the levers of the hand pump, the
deck swept by the bursting seas, a wild
and angry sky above, the sea shore per-

dom and charity in its advocates are needed. They should not be vindictive or try to exclude those who do not agree with them from respectable circles. The real trouble is the constant tendency in human nature, founded on the warfare between reason and the beast.
This warfare must last so long as the race shall endure. There is no short cut to victory. Have patience. Use reason. Tell the Germans who would make Sunday a beer-drinking day, not that they are free thinkers and infidels, trying to pull down
our institutions, but that, although they know more about music and art, and are better students than we, yet that we have solved the question of self-government, and that is found in self restraint. Use reason, not vituperation. Create a ripe public sentiment, and the temperance question will be nearer solution."

Turkey in America

The largest single contract ever taken in the United States from a foreign nation is the $17,000,000 one given to the Providence (R. I.) Tool Company by the Turkish Government. The Tool Company was three years in preparing to begin the work upon the contract, and now employ 2,500 men who turn out 200,000 guns per year, or 600 finished guns per day. These guns are the Martini-Heury rifles. One of the side businesses of magnitude which has grown principally out of this contract is that of the Excelsior Box Company of Providence. This Company is now busy making 20,000 boxes per year for the Tool Company in which to ship their guns to Turkey. Each box is made to hold twenty of the guns,
and with such accuracy are groove pieces
for the interior of the boxes made that they do not allow a play of even one two-hundredth part of an inch of the arms, when packed with the muzzle tip
and shoulder piece resting in the grooves.
No other precaution is needed or used in one, with feeble ties connecting me with those left behind, I was in possession of a fortune for those early days. I recall the fact that this thought was a tenant of my mind for a moment, and for a moment only. Bless God, it found no hospitable lodgement any longer. And what thank you, gentle reader, were the associate thoughts that came to my rescue? Away, over rivers and mountains,

a thousand miles distant, in a humble
farm-house, on a bench, an aged mother
reading to her boy from the oracles of God."

An American Opinion of the Montreal Outrage

England guards her interests and her citizens with a jealous eye. If you tread on the coat-tail of an Englishman in any part of the civilized or savage world, it strains a seam in the pea-jacket of every sailor in the British navy. If an Englishman is arrested in Brazil, a fleet of war ships is sent down to enquire into it.
If an Englishman is insulted on the streets of Madrid, the British Government demands of the Spanish Government an immediate explanation. If an Englishman stubs his toe against the tallest pyramid in Egypt, the Khedive is requested to have a sign placed conspicuously in front of the pyramid, cautioning
British subjects against similar mishaps.
If an Englishman is taken down with the measles in Hungary, a request is sent from the Royal Health Requiring Society of England, asking that the disease may be abated. Should an English child be attacked with the chicken pox in New York, Earl Derby suggests to our Government that a little more attention to the sanitary condition of our metropolitan cities would be advisable. So it goes all the world around and all the year around. How surprised we are, therefore, upon reading the despatches from Montreal! Here we find a body of citizens, calling themselves, for want of a better name perhaps, Orangemen, preparing to celebrate the 12th day of July, as they have celebrated it for years. We find that another body of citizens have prepared to break up this celebration at any cost. We find that the Orangemen appeal to the civil authorities for protection. We find that they are turned over to the military authorities. We find that again
they are turned over to the civil authorities, and again instructed to see the military authorities. We find that after all this going backward and forward, they are at last informed by the military and civil authorities that no protection can be afforded them! No protection!
No protection afforded a body of English subjects! Great heavens, as Mr. Micawber would say, the god of day is frowning upon the age.—Chicago

How a Chicago Girl Fixed him.

"Will you do something to oblige me?"
shly asked a beautiful young woman of a timid gentleman, whose acquaintance she had just made at a small social gathering on West Adams Street the other evening.
"Anything that I can in honor, miss,"
he replied blushing.
"Well," said she "come in the back parlor, where it is dark, and sit on the sofa with me, and let me rest my head on your shoulder, and you pretend to whisper in my ear, only don't blow, because that tickles, and I can't laugh, for this new dress is very tight; and when anybody looks you can draw your arm away—I forgot to say I wish you to put it around my waist—I'll pretend to blush."
"But, my gracious honored miss,"
stammered the young man, after hastily dividing 4 into 1874, and finding that it wasn't leap year; "my goodness before all these people—and I am already engaged—and your father must weigh—"
"Hush, I know what I am up to," replied the artless girl. "I am engaged,
too, to that young man talking to the woman faced thing with somebody else's hair over there. I want to stir him up and bring him down to business."

with the other appurtenances of a meal. If she could manage to find a handkerchief, taking with her a kerchief folded for the purpose, and she could then appropriate a part of contents of that jar, and, returning her prize, apply it to his throat, he might be able to get some relief, so he might be able to leave his bed next morning at five. "But I am sure it will be very disagreeable for you to sit all alone at this time of day," he croaked out in a piteous whine.

"Of course I'll go," said she. "I don't do anything in the least." "Nobody will see," she said at once began to fold a handkerchief. "I won't be two weeks, my darling; and if there is a drop of mustard in the house, I'll have your chest almost immediately." She was a woman not easily cowed, and journey down into the saloon was long to her. Before she went she tied the clothes carefully up to his, and then she started. She ran along the first corridor till she came to a flight of stairs was easy enough, easy enough to descend them. There was another corridor and another it, and a third corridor and a third it, and she began to think that she was wrong. She found herself in a part of a hotel which she had not hitherto reached, and soon discovered by looking through an open door or two that she found her way among a set of private dressing-rooms which she had not seen before. Then she tried to make her way up the same stairs and through the passages, so that she might start him. She was beginning to think that she had lost herself altogether, and that she would be able to find neither the sailor nor her bedroom, when she happily met the night-porter. She was dressed in a loose white dressing-gown, with a net over her loose hair, and with the worsted slippers. "I ought, perhaps," she had described her personal appearance sooner. She was a large woman, with a commanding bust, thought some to be handsome, after the manner of Juno. But with strangers there was a certain severity of manner about—a fortification, as it were, of her virginity against all possible attacks—a determination to maintain, at all times, the beautiful character of a Briton, which, much as it had been appreciated at Thompson Hall, had met with some ill-natured criticism among such men and women. At Pau she had been called La Fiere Anglaise. The maid had reached her own ears and those of her husband. He had been much amazed, but she had taken it in good part, indeed, been somewhat proud of it. With her husband she could, on occasion, be soft, but she was of opinion that with other men a British matron should be stern. She was now greatly wanting of assistance; but, nevertheless, as she met the porter she remembered her character. "I have lost my way wandering through these horrid passages," she said, in her severest tone. This was in answer to some question from a—some question to which her reply was given very slowly. Then when he asked where madame wished to go, she used, again thinking what destination would announce. No doubt the man would take her back to her bedroom, but, O, the mustard must be renounced, with the mustard, as she now feared, hope of reaching Thompson Hall on a—some day. But she, though she was many respects a brave woman, did not like to tell the man that she was prowling about the hotel in order that she might make a midnight raid upon the staid pot. She paused, therefore, for a moment, that she might collect her thoughts, erecting her head as she did so, in the best Juno fashion, till the porter was lost in admiration. Thus she gained time to fabricate a tale. She had, she said, dropped her handkerchief under the par table; and would he show her the labor to the levers of the hand pump, the deck swept by the bursting seas, a wild and angry sky above, the sea shore perfectly horrible in the tempest of its waves and the thunder of the surf that went rolling and charging by squallions of billows over half a mile of low sandy bottom. I asked myself whether, if the ship broke up, I could manage the undertow—at that merciless drag backward of the sea, the topmast wave washing the swimmer inclusively toward the shore, the undertow sucking him down and out. I said to myself an emphatic "Yes." But the experience was spared me, and I got ashore next morning in a big boat. Ever since that awful hour and night, I have had a sincere respect for the science and art of swimming, in which next to God, I then rested all my hope and trust.

But before we talk about fighting an undertow in a wicked sea-way, let us discuss the principles and method of swimming. To drown in a river, with the shore only a few yards away, when any dog or donkey would reach the land, must involve a feeling of personal humiliation as well as despair. To be self-trustworthy is the first thing in moments of danger; but the art of swimming has a high value in the saving of other lives and is, besides, a luxury and accomplishment, worth the having for the mere fun of the thing. In our civilization swimming is an acquired accomplishment. It is understood to be a natural function with nearly all kinds of animals, hogs and humanity being the leading exceptions. The inability to swim is in all cases a defect of education. The true plan to follow, when safety is the call, is to swim with everything below the chin well down under water, the head well back and resting centrally on the floating power of the lungs. But what will you do when your comrade is sure to be out-drowning? That depends. If he is cool and reliable, get in front of him, let him place his hands on your hips and your shoulders, and you can carry him quite a distance. That supposes that both parties, rescued the rescuer, understand fair play. The weaker party is the one that ought to drown, if he shows any disposition to drown, his friend by a miserable, cowardly death clutch at the only floating thing around him. In the case of the death clutch, go to the bottom with your man and leave him there. There may be an unpleasant wrestle, but the real drowning man is ready to quit his prey when he strikes bottom. The better man has his right to come to the surface and swim ashore.

But in a considerable swimming experience, and some rescues, there comes one absolute rule: Never face a drowning man. He welcomes rescue so eagerly that he will hang you around the neck and take you down. The safest and the best thing to do is to get behind him, and, unless you are left handied, put your left hand under his right armpit. The lift you give him will be enough in ordinary water. He can be coaxed to help himself, and if he is a reasonable being you can bring him to shore. If he is insane with fright, recollect that you are sane with fright, recollect that you are sane with prudent and heroic. Get away from him, clutch his ankle with one hand and tow him ashore. If the bark is near he is not likely to drown on the way. If he does, it is not your fault. But a brave swimmer is master of his element.

I once saw two young fellows rescue a drowning comrade in a way that was remarkable for its neatness. The fellow was in mid-stream, cramped and exhausted, and barely able to keep afloat. Which was first was never decided, but in the critical moment each was behind him, each with a hand under an arm-pit; he was also a dead weight on their hands, and they swam him ashore, more dead than alive. It was a struggle, but they were the masters of the situation.—St. Nicholas.

The Return of the Slipper.

We hail with pleasure the advent of the ladies' slipper. It has long been in retirement, it adds a new attraction to the street. The French botine may now take a rest. Nearly a generation has passed whose only street view of the feminine ankle has been through leather. At last the stocking of our grandmothers is revealed. The clean, white hose is a power in the land. Its influence is sudden, mysterious, subtle and magnetic. It concentrates all eyes as to a focus on itself. It amuses and interests the loungers. It affords to the hurried man of business a momentary respite. It redoubles the liabilities of the careless to be run over. It is not without a charm for the aged breast. No portion of a lady's apparel is more effective. The showy article, if at all symmetrical, half compensates for a plain face. It is a make-weight in the dower of feminine beauty of which women for long years have been robbed. For the boot is expensive. A little worn, and it becomes misshapen and ugly. We welcome the slipper. Long may it reign. The simpler the style the better.—N. Y. Graphic.

The young man said that a load had been lifted from his bosom, and aided her to the best of his ability: so well, indeed, that in three-quarters of an hour the true betrothed got his girl into the library, demanded an explanation of her shameless conduct, was softened by tears, called himself a brute, asked if she could ever forgive him and promised to behave better in future. And how did the young girl reward the young man who had helped her to this happiness? Why she never said a word to him all the evening: in fact, never mentioned him, except to say to her reconciled lover, "Alonzo, could you have been so stupid as to think I could see anything to admire in such a nut-head as that?" O, women, in our hours of ease.—Chicago Tribune.

The name of the "Mollie Maguires" comes from Ireland. Some forty years or more ago a poor old woman in Ireland had her cottage pulled down over her head by a landlord. Her name was Mollie Maguire, and she died of grief and exposure. Thereupon her sons and neighbor lads formed themselves into a society, and vowed and took fierce revenge on Irish landlords in general. The band spread rapidly, and they called themselves Mollie Maguires, and Irish coal miners brought the name to America.

the overtures and resolutions made during the past week—we have gained fresh experience, but only to make us more determined in our resistance to Orange aggression."

The surrender of their plain right to walk has been made by the Orangemen in vain. Their overtures and resolutions made during the week, "are repudiated." Thus a direct invitation to violence in the future is invited. But the True Witness and its rabid coadjutors must be "taught that the privileges of a free country cannot be trampled in the dust. The rights of the minority, whether it be a Catholic minority in Toronto or a protestant one in Montreal must and shall be maintained. We don't wish to champion party processions; very often they are injudicious and provocative of harm. But these facts do not cancel the rights of processionists to walk, nor absolve the authorities from extending their protection to them. A Catholic procession is as galling to an Orangeman as an Orange one would be to a Catholic, but without doubt each has a right to walk in processions, and both are equally worthy of the protection of the law. It is no doubt gall and wormwood to a distressed debtor to see a rich creditor riding the horse or rolling in the carriage that were his but yesterday, but will the law justify the unfortunate debtor in knocking his ostentatious creditor on the head? The only way, to avoid trouble is to let both parties walk and to protect both in the exercise of rights vouchsafed to each and both, by virtue of our free institutions. Is the law to be set at defiance because a hot headed fanatic cannot hear a party tune "whistled" without committing riot and bloodshed? No: the law must be maintained in its supremacy and they who have a right to its protection irrespective of creed or party must be protected.

THE PREMIER SLANDERS.

Perhaps no other newspapers in the Dominion with one exception would be guilty of a gross and scurrilous attack on the Hon. ALEX. MACKENZIE as the following taken from the London Herald:—"Poor Hackett was murdered, foully murdered. His murderer was not the nameless villain who emptied his revolver into him, but the civic and Dominion authorities, who refused him that protection to which every British subject is entitled. But even Mayor Beaudry is only an accomplice in the affair. The real murderer of poor Hackett is the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the Premier of the Dominion. Had he declared that the Government would see the peace preserved at all risks poor Hackett would be alive to-day. But he was desirous to conciliate the Roman Catholic vote of Quebec, and the Orangemen were therefore given to understand that if they marched it would be at their own risk."

And the Toronto Leader sanctions the infamous slander by saying: "at the 'saddle was put upon the right horse.' It is however, to the credit of the conservative press that they repudiate the scurrilous specimen of gratuitous insult. Whatever we might say in vindication of Mr. Mackenzie's conduct in the premises we shall allow his enemies to defend him from the attack of London Herald. The Ottawa Citizen says:—"We observe that a few of our contemporaries, evidently with a view to

conflict. By eight in the evening mobs were moving about the city in various directions, sacking stores to secure arms, breaking into the armouries for the military companies and preparing themselves to execute the threats freely expressed of massacring the entire Philadelphia command. The military were ordered to one of the round-houses, for better protection. About ten o'clock a mob numbering several thousands had congregated about the round-house. They had previously captured the guns belonging to Hutchinson's Battery, a local organization, and planted them so as to command the round-house. Several solid shot were fired at the building, and breaches were made in the walls: but when the infuriated mob attempted to rush into the building, the military were ordered to fire a volley of musketry, which followed. Finding it difficult to dislodge the military from the building they resolved to burn them out, and an order to this effect was issued. In consequence of the blockade, which had existed for two days, the sidings in the outer depot yards, as well as those extending eastward some three or four miles, were crowded with freight cars filled with grain produce, and merchandise, besides which were a number loaded with oil cake and coal. The cars were piled up in a mass, while a portion of the mob surrounded the building in which the military had taken refuge. Large bodies proceeded to set fire to the oil cars, and in a moment huge volumes of smoke which rolled upwards, followed by lurid flames reaching out in every direction, told that the work of destruction had commenced. The sight of the flames seemed to literally craze the rioters, some of whom rushed wildly about with flaming torches in their hands, applying them to cars indiscriminately. The alarm was sounded and the Fire Department promptly responded, but the rioters, who had complete control of the city, refused to permit them to go to extinguish the flames. They said they were determined to destroy the Railroad Company's property, but would do no injury to that belonging to private citizens. They kept their word, too, and when a lumber pile belonging to a citizen took fire the rioters themselves turned in and helped to extinguish the flames.

Train after train was fired by the infuriated crowd, but the cars were so far distant from the round-house that the heat did not seriously affect the military, although their position was one peril. Finally a large party of strikers captured a car filled with coke, which they ran from the Alleghany Valley Railway track to a siding connecting with the Pennsylvania Railroad. They then procured large quantities of petroleum oil, and pouring it over the coke ignited the materials. In a very few moments the car was a mass of fire, and it was then pushed along the tracks and forced against the round-house. The building was soon ignited, but did not burn as rapidly as desired, and the mob rushed out on the road and sent burning trains towards the buildings. From midnight until five this morning the main efforts of the crowd were directed to firing buildings and cars, but about half an hour later the mob which had been besieging the military left for some unexplained reason. This afforded the troops, who were in actual danger of being roasted alive, an opportunity to emerge from the building. They quickly intruded up to 33rd street, and thence to Pennsylvania avenue and Butler-street. Their objective point was the United States Arsenal in Butler-street, where they expected to obtain shelter. While turning into Butler-st, however, the rioters discovered their retreat. Quite 1,000, fully armed and supplied with ammunition, followed in pursuit. Some of the troops fired at the citizens, either accidentally or intentionally, as they were moving along.

this time calmly folded their arms looked on. It was feared that the flagration would sweep the entire portion of the city south of the Pan Handle road tracks. When the last building fired the whole territory between Bayview and Millvale station, a distance three miles, was a mass of flames. Three soldiers who attempted to escape from round-house were shot by the mob instantly killed. Two citizens were shot down. In the riot at 28th-st yesterday afternoon twenty were killed and twenty-nine wounded. The bill was dotted with dead and dying. Leaving the arsenal to-day the Philadelphia troops turned their Gatling gun the crowd with great loss of life. 71 persons are killed, mostly strikers citizens.

The Vigilance Committee is now growing stronger. It is thought that destruction of life and property is at hand. It is estimated that 2,000 loaded with oil, coal, and all kind merchandise, were totally destroyed. These, together with the locomotive buildings, and other property destroyed the Pennsylvania Railroad Company loses to an amount variously estimated from three to four millions of dollars.

PITTSBURG July 28.—At Pittsburgh militia were not reinforced nor well supplied with ammunition. The public sympathised with the strikers. A hundred well officered, resolute militia would have saved five millions worth property. The strike is over here, as Pennsylvania road has nothing left strike against.

While the Philadelphia militia were treating a citizen, whose brother been killed during Saturday's fighting, a man shot two soldiers dead. A thousand freight cars were burned, a disgraceful feature of the Pittsburgh was the refusal of the 14th and 1st Pennsylvania Regiments to serve long, alleging as a reason the accidental killing of a private in the 14th Regiment by Eastern militia.

The Mayo has issued a proclamation inviting the citizens to unite in measures for suppressing violence, ordering the saloons to be closed, and women and children off the streets. He is the riotous demonstrations must stand be put down. The members of Grand Army of the Republic and veterans are being called out for patrol duty. The measures taken will certainly prevent further violence. The strikers 28th street have surrendered their arms including three pieces of artillery, to Citizens' Committee.

Business establishments have suspended and the employees have organized themselves into companies and tendered their services to the city. The services of 19th Regiment have also been accepted. The City Council this morning pledged itself to meet the expenses incurred in suppressing violence. To-day the strikers seem universally disposed to assist law-abiding citizens in saving property. The hopes of a compromise between Fort Wayne men and their employers are ended. When this became known all the passengers, engineers, and firemen quitted their engines. No trains any kind will go out this evening. The Pennsylvania Railway there is possible hope of a compromise. The Company says if the community can along without the Pennsylvania Railroad the latter can get along without strikers.

The scenes about the Union Depot day were not hard of description. Desolation. The ruins of the passenger depot and Pan Handle building were covered with men and women cowering with sticks and hands for plunder. HARRISBURG Pa., July 22.—The conveying militia to Pittsburgh was held and stoned here. The police made one arrest and were also stoned by a mob. The coupling pins of an engine

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEK, JULY, 27th 1877.

The opposition papers have been making a persistent attempt to create political capital out of Senator McPherson's notorious if not celebrated pamphlet. With the usual regard for truth it is stated that he was once the friend of the present government, and as usual, this statement is in no particular true. The only grounds for such a statement exist in the fact that the Hon. Senator considered himself badly used by his conservative friends and rather gave the cold shoulder although when his allegiance was put to the test he did not hesitate to use all his efforts to shield them from the fate their misdeeds brought upon them. He never was a friend even negatively to the present administration. They nor the cause of good government have nothing to thank him for.

INTOLERANCE.

Once the Twelfth of July over and the disposal of the melancholy business arising from the disorders of that day—the burial of Hackett's body—it was only reasonable to hope that the spirit of discord which had some slight excuse on this occasion, would have died out and that the usual serenity would fall upon the society of the city. But such unfortunately is not the case. There are restless, bigoted, fiery and unreasonable spirits, who persist in a malevolently energetic endeavor to fan embers of discord into a flame and perpetuate the bloody scenes that have disgraced the fair fame of the city of Montreal for order and tolerance for many a day. Nobody has presumed to charge upon Catholics in that city, an atom of responsibility for the disgraceful and melancholy deeds of the day in question. Since then it is well known that they have deprecated any continuation of the animosity shown on that day, they have refused to condone the violence that ended in murder, but in spite of these

ing taken from the London Herald:—

"Poor Hackett was murdered, foully murdered. His murderer was not the nameless villain who emptied his revolver into him, but the civic and Dominion authorities, who refused him that protection to which every British subject is entitled. But even Mayor Beaudry is only an accomplice in the affair. The real murderer of poor Hackett is the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the Premier of the Dominion. Had he declared that the Government would see the peace preserved at all risks poor Hackett would be alive to-day. But he was desirous to conciliate the Roman Catholic vote of Quebec, and the Orangemen were therefore given to understand that if they marched it would be at their own risk."

And the Toronto Leader sanctions the infamous slander by saying it at the "saddle was put upon the right horse." It is however, to the credit of the conservative press that they repudiate the scurrilous specimen of gratuitous insult. Whatever we might say in vindication of Mr. Mackenzie's conduct in the premises we shall allow his enemies to defend him from the attack of London Herald. The Ottawa Citizen says:—

"We observe that a few of our contemporaries, evidently misled, are blaming Hon. Alex. Mackenzie for failing to put forth greater efforts to suppress or prevent the Montreal disturbance. This is unjust. In the first place, Mr. Mackenzie, as Premier, telegraphed that the Government would do all in its power to put down the mob, and we believe the Hon. R. W. Scott, who is acting Minister of Militia, exerted himself vigorously in the cause of peace and order. The Minister of Justice, M. Laflamme, also advised prompt measures so soon as the matter came before him in legal form, and the magistrates of Montreal had requested Governmental interference. To blame the Government, when they did all in their power to suppress the uprising, is both unfair and unpatriotic, and we regret that any journal should have been misled into doing either the Premier or his colleagues an injustice."

New York, July 29.—The Erie railway officials furnish the following:—Last evening a meeting of firemen and brakemen was held in Hornellsville, at the close of which a message was sent by a chairman to the Superintendent of the Erie railway, notifying him that the men on the Western Susquehanna and Buffalo divisions had resolved to quit work at one o'clock this morning. The Superintendent proceeded at once to Hornellsville, arriving there this morning and found the strikers had quit work and had taken measures to prevent any train, passenger or freight, from leaving or passing through Hornellsville, east or west. Simultaneously the firemen, brakemen and switchmen at Salamanca, on the Western division, quit work, and when the Superintendent of that division arrived at Salamanca his engine was cut loose from the train and put into the engine house, and the strikers notified him no engine or train would be permitted to pass Salamanca. At a car filled with coke, which they ran from the Alleghany Valley Railway track to a siding connecting with the Pennsylvania Railroad. They then procured large quantities of petroleum oil, and pouring it over the coke ignited the materials. In a very few moments the car was a mass of fire, and it was then pushed along the tracks and forced against the round-house. The building was soon ignited, but did not burn as rapidly as desired, and the mob rushed out on the road and sent burning trains towards the buildings. From midnight until five this morning the main efforts of the crowd were directed to firing buildings and cars, but about half an hour later the mob which had been besieging the military left for some unexplained reason. This afforded the troops, who were in actual danger of being roasted alive, an opportunity to emerge from the building. They quickly marched up to 33rd street, and thence to Pennsylvania avenue and Butler-street. Their objective point was the United States Arsenal in Butler-street, where they expected to obtain shelter. While turning into Butler-st., however, the rioters discovered their retreat. Quite 1,000, fully armed and supplied with ammunition, followed in pursuit. Some of the troops fired at the citizens, either accidentally or intentionally, as they were moving along. When they reached the arsenal the commandant refused to admit them. He said he had but ten men, and would be powerless to hold the place if the mob should attack it. He consented to take care of the wounded, and they were accordingly carried into the hospitals. The main body of the troops continued their march up Butler-street, a fusillade being kept up on them by the mob. As they moved forward shots were fired, and killed one of the soldiers before they reached the arsenal, a mile above the arsenal, two others were killed and were left lying on the sidewalk. They continued their fight, and crossed over to the north side of the Alleghany River on Shaysburg Bridge, the mob following them as rapidly as possible. After reaching the north side the troops scattered, and in this way the mob was divided into very small bodies. In the meantime the city was in a state of anarchy. Thousands who had joined in pursuit of the fleeing troops gathered about the burning buildings and trains, and assisted in spreading the flames. By seven o'clock the fire had extended, and enveloped hundreds of cars. The railroad buildings destroyed were as follows:—Two round-houses, one machine shop, Superintendent's office, car repair shop, blacksmith's shops, three or four oil houses, Union Transfer Depot and offices, dispatcher's office, powder house, Union Depot, Hotel, Pan Handle Railway engine house, general office and freight depot, and freight depot of the Adam Express Co. In the round houses were 125 first-class locomotives, which were totally destroyed.

The scenes transpired on Liberty-street along the line of which the tracks of the railroad run, simply beggar description. While hundreds were engaged in firing the cars and making certain of the destruction of the valuable buildings at the center depot, thousands of men, women, and children were engaged in pillaging the cars. Men armed with heavy sledges would break open the cars, and their contents would be thrown out and carried off by those bent on profiting by the reign of terror existing. The street was almost completely blockaded by persons labouring to carry off the plunder they had gathered together. In hundreds of instances waggons were pressed into the service to enable the thieves to get away with their goods. Mayor McCarthy early in the day endeavored to stop the pillage, but the handful of men at his command were unable to control the crowd. The pillage was checked but the mob fired the cars, and then proceeded with the work of destruction. It is impossible to form any idea of the amount of goods stolen, but hundreds of thousands of Dollars will not cover the loss.

The Roman Catholic press have most earnestly as a rule protested against the riotous acts of a few hot headed and brutal fanatics, and have bestowed unstinted praise upon the magnanimity of the Orange body in foregoing their procession in the interests of the peace and good name of the city of Montreal. But there is one blood-thirsty and rabid exception, the True Witness. The manner in which it spits fire, and calls on war to the knife, is outrageously disgraceful. But fortunately its very violence will defeat its object. The Catholic must be of the most depraved, who will not be shocked at the rabid calls to bloodshed and persecution urged by the True Witness. We will give one short extract from an article which breathes bloodshed in every line.

"Yes, yes, insult was intended and insult has been accepted, and unless these Orange displays are stopped in this Province at least, we fear bloody work is in store for us all. The Catholic people of this country will welcome strife rather than submit to persecution. They will hail civil war with joy rather than be trailed at the heel of an Orange ascendancy. At Albany station, on the western division, one of the striking firemen took the engine and went on the main road without orders or permission from the Company, and on the line of the trains, intending he said to go to Hornellsville.

Reduction in the wages by the Erie Railway Company of ten per cent on July 1st applied only to the above classes of employees, who were not affected by the reduction of the previous year, and with this reduction in effect the train and road hands now receive higher compensation than on any other eastern road. All classes of men on the Erie have been treated by the Company with consideration. Their pay is not only reasonable but liberal, for the times, and if there are any employees expressing dissatisfaction, the Receiver is ready to pay them off promptly and hire other men in their places, and expresses his determination to carry out the order of July 1st to the letter. The Erie Company has arranged to have its through passengers and baggage carried via N. Y. C. R. until its own trains resume running.

Pittsburg, July 22.—The crisis of the railway strike in this city on Friday night was reached yesterday afternoon about five o'clock, when the Philadelphia troops who had been sent here to suppress the strikers fired upon the crowd. The terribly fatal effects of the shots fired by the troops exasperated the citizens as well as strikers, and in less than an hour a thousand working-men from the rolling mills, coal mines, and various manufacturing establishments hurried to the scene of the struggle upon Butler street, a fusillade being kept up on them by the mob. As they moved forward shots were fired, and killed one of the soldiers before they reached the arsenal, a mile above the arsenal, two others were killed and were left lying on the sidewalk. They continued their fight, and crossed over to the north side of the Alleghany River on Sharpshooters Bridge, the mob following them as rapidly as possible. After reaching the north side the troops scattered, and in this way the mob was divided into very small bodies. In the meantime the city was in a state of anarchy. Thousands who had joined in pursuit of the fleeing troops gathered about the burning buildings and trains, and assisted in spreading the flames. By seven o'clock the fire had extended, and enveloped hundreds of cars. The railroad building destroyed were as follows:—Two round-houses, one machine shop, Superintendent's office, car repair shop, blacksmith's shops, three or four oil houses, Union Transfer Depot and offices, despatcher's office, powder house, Union Depot, Hotel, Pan Handle Railway engine house, general office and freight depot, and freight depot of the Adam Express Co. In the round houses were 125 first-class locomotives, which were totally destroyed.

The scenes transpired on Liberty street along the line of which the tracks of the railroad run, simply beggar description. While hundreds were engaged in firing the cars and making certain of the destruction of the valuable buildings at the enter depot, thousands of men, women, and children were engaged in pillaging the cars. Men armed with heavy sledges would break open the cars, and their contents would be thrown out and carried off by those bent on profiting by the reign of terror existing. The street was almost completely blockaded by persons labouring to carry off the plunder they had gathered together. In hundreds of instances waggons were pressed into the service to enable the thieves to get away with their goods. Mayor McCarty early in the day endeavored to stop the pillage, but the handful of men at his command were unable to control the crowd. The pillage was checked but the mob fired the cars, and then proceeded with the work of destruction. It is impossible to form any idea of the amount of goods stolen, but hundreds of thousands of Dollars will not cover the loss.

Here a brawny woman could be seen hurrying away with a pair of white kid slippers under her arms. Another, carrying an infant, would be rolling a barrel of flour alongside the walk, using her feet as propelling power, &c.

At eleven o'clock it became apparent that some thing must be done to check the mob, and a number of citizens hurriedly prepared notices calling a mass meeting of citizens at the old City Hall to take measures to prevent further destruction of property. The meeting was held at noon, and a large number of leading citizens responded to the call. It was decided to appoint a Committee, consisting principally of clergymen, to have a conference with the rioters, while another Committee was appointed to wait on the railroad authorities to ascertain what course they intended to pursue, or suggest a compromise that would put an end to the disorder. The committee to wait on the rioters failed to induce them to refrain from further destruction of property, and the railroad authorities could not be found. It is stated that the ringleaders were men who had never been employed on any railroad.

The fire department were on duty from the time of the first alarm, but were not allowed to throw any water on or make any effort to save the property of the Railway Company. They consequently directed their efforts to saving private property. In this they were mainly successful, although dwellings and a sash factory were destroyed. Early in the day, when the Union Depot building was fired, followed by the Pan Handle offices, a panic seized the citizens, who had up to

ing a large quantity of grain. The destruction of these buildings seemed to satisfy the rioters, as they began to disperse while they were burning. At the adjourned meeting of the citizens, Vigilance Committees were organized to prevent further destruction of property. I was rapidly recruited, and each member of the first was provided with baseball bats, but these were afterwards exchanged for guns. The indications now are the reign of the mob is over, although threats have been made that several railroad buildings will be fired this evening.

ALTOONA, Pa., July 22.—A train of soldiers which reached here en route to Pittsburg was stopped by the strikers and the engines take therefrom. One company stacked their arms and refused to do anything. Another company tried to connect an engine to the train, but was attacked and driven off. The whole train of soldiers now here is under complete control of the strikers.

COLUMBIA, Pa., July 22.—The Pennsylvania Railroad men struck about two o'clock. The round house has been quietly closed. No engines are allowed to leave. No disorder.

HARRISBURG, 23.—A portion of the Philadelphia City troops en route from Altoona to Philadelphia disembarked from the cars a few miles west of Harrisburg, and are now working their way towards Philadelphia, avoiding Harrisburg. Immense crowds still remain about the depots.

The Pennsylvania Railroad strikers have held a meeting at which resolutions deprecating violence were adopted. The dismissal of Frank Thomas, General Manager, was asked, and a committee was appointed to inform Superintendent McCrea that they were willing to compromise on honourable terms, and would use every effort to protect the Company property.

The mob forced Altamir's gun store and seized a quantity of arms. The Mayor induced them to return part of the plunder. 600 strikers crossed the river in search of the Philadelphia militia, and returned with 23 men of the First and Second Regiments as their prisoners.

READING, Pa., July 23.—The strike have burned a train of five freight cars and the Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge across the Schuylkill, costing $150,000, to prevent the passage of troops.

A collision between the Fourth Militia and the rioters occurred on the track which the mob were tearing up. The soldiers were assailed with stones, and immediately commenced firing without orders. The firing was indiscriminate the bullets doing bad work among the immense concourse of people, among whom are many respectable citizens, well as ladies and children. Five persons have been killed, and from eighteen to twenty-five wounded, several mortal. Numbers of others are wounded who escaped in the crowd. Among the wounded are several members of the police force. Numbers of soldiers were knocked down and injured by large stones. The mob broke into the armoury of the Reading Rifles, and have also taken the weapons from a gun store. They threaten vengeance on the military. The mob is now engaged in tearing up the railroad tracks, and there is a block of accumulated freight and coal cars. The railroad company has a strong guard stationed around all their machine shops and other buildings in the city.

Bars of iron were discovered on the track, intended to throw off the train which brought the Schuylkill militia.

BALTIMORE, July 22.—Fifteen minutes before three this morning an incendiary fired a train of thirty-five or forty cars loaded with crude petroleum, at the V duet Station, a short distance beyond the city limits. The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes the cars on train on an adjoining track were also on fire. A locomotive was sent out from Camden Station, and that portion of train not on fire drawn off amid the jeers and cries of the strikers. Nine cars containing from 300 to 350 barrels of

the overtures and resolutions made during the past week—we have gained fresh experience, but only to make us more determined in our resistance to Orange aggression."

The surrender of their plain right to walk has been made by the Orangemen in vain. Their overtures and resolutions made during the week, "are repudiated." Thus a direct invitation to violence in the future is invited. But the True Witness and its rabid conditors must be "taught that the privileges of a free country cannot be trampled in the dust. The rights of the minority, whether it be a Catholic minority in Toronto or a protestant one in Montreal must and shall be maintained. We don't wish to champion party processions; very often they are injudicious and provocative of harm. But these facts do not cancel the rights of processionists to walk, nor absolve the authorities from extending their protection to them. A Catholic procession is as galling to an Orangeman as an Orange one would be to a Catholic, but without doubt each has a right to walk in processions, and both are equally worthy of the protection of the law. It is no doubt gall and wormwood to a distressed debtor to see a rich creditor riding the horse or rolling in the carriage that were his but yesterday, but will the law justify the unfortunate debtor in knocking his ostentatious creditor on the head? the only way, to avoid trouble is to let both parties walk and to protect both in the exercise of rights vouchsafed to each and both, by virtue of our free institutions. Is the law to be set at defiance because a hot-headed fanatic cannot hear a party tune "whistled" without committing riot and bloodshed? No: the law must be maintained in its supremacy and they who have a right to its protection irrespective of creed or party must be protected.

THE PREMIER SLANDERS.

Perhaps no other newspapers in the Dominion with one exception would be guilty of a gross and scurrilous attack on the Hon. ALEX. MACKENZIE as the following taken from the London Herald:

"Poor Hackett was murdered, foully murdered. His murderer was not the nameless villain who emptied his revolver into him, but the civic and Dominion authorities, who refused him that protection to which every British subject is entitled. But even Mayor Beaudry is only an accomplice in the affair. The real murderer of poor Hackett is the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the Premier of the Dominion. Had he declared that the Government would see the peace preserved at all risks poor Hackett would be alive to-day. But he was desirous to conciliate the Roman Catholic vote of Quebec, and the Orangemen were therefore given to understand that if they marched it would be at their own risk."

And the Toronto Leader sanctions the infamous slander by saying that the "saddle was put upon the right horse." It is however, to the credit of the conservative press that they repudiate the scurrilous specimen of gratuitous insult. Whatever we might say in vindication of Mr. Mackenzie's conduct in the premises we shall allow his enemies to defend him from the

conflict. By eight in the evening mobs were moving about the city in various directions, sacking stores to secure arms. Taking into the armouries for the militia companies and preparing themselves to execute the threats freely expressed of massacring the entire Philadelphia command. The military were ordered to one of the round-houses, for better protection. About ten o'clock a mob numbering several thousands had congregated about the round house. They had previously captured the guns belonging to Hutchinson's Battery, a local organization, and planted them so as to command the round-house. Several solid shot were fired at the building, and breaches were made in the walls: but when the infuriated mob attempted to rush into the building, the military were ordered to fire a volley of musketry, which followed. Finding it difficult to dislodge the military from the building they resolved to burn them out, and an order to this effect was issued. In consequence of the blockade, which had existed for two days, the sidings in the outer depot yards, as well as those extending eastward some three or four miles, were crowded with freight cars filled with grain produce, and merchandise, besides which were a number loaded with oil cake and coal. The cars were piled up in a mass, while a portion of the mob surrounded the building in which the military had taken refuge. Large bodies proceeded to set fire to the oil cars, and in a moment huge volumes of smoke which rolled upwards, followed by lurid flames reaching out in every direction, told that the work of destruction had commenced. The sight of the flames seemed to literally craze the rioters, some of whom rushed wildly about with flaming torches in their hands, applying them to cars indiscriminately. The alarm was sounded and the Fire Department promptly responded, but the rioters, who had complete control of the city, refused to permit them to go to extinguish the flames. They said they were determined to destroy the Railroad Company's property, but would do no injury to that belonging to private citizens. They kept their word, too, and when a lumber pile belonging to a citizen took fire the rioters themselves turned in and helped to extinguish the flames.

Train after train was fired by the infuriated crowd, but the cars were so far distant from the round-house that the heat did not seriously affect the military, although their position was one of peril. Finally a large party of strikers captured a car filled with coke, which they ran from the Alleghany Valley Railway track to a siding connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad. They then procured large quantities of petroleum oil, and pouring it over the coke ignited the materials. In a very few moments the car was a mass of fire, and it was then pushed along the tracks and forced against the round-house. The building was soon ignited, but did not burn as rapidly as desired, and the mob rushed out on the road and sent burning trains towards the buildings. From midnight until five this morning the main efforts of the crowd were directed to firing buildings and cars, but about half an hour later the mob which had been besieging the military left for some unexplained reason. This afforded the troops, who were in actual danger of being roasted alive, an opportunity to emerge from the building. They quickly marched up to 33rd street, and thence to Pennsylvania avenue and Butler-street. Their objective point was the United States Arsenal in Butler-street, where they expected to obtain shelter. While turning into Butler-st., however, the rioters discovered their retreat. Quite 1,000, fully armed and supplied with ammunition, followed in con-

this time calmly folded their arms and looked on. It was feared that the conflagration would sweep the entire portion of the city south of the Pan Handle Railroad tracks. When the last building was fired the whole territory between Seventh-avenue and Millvale station, a distance of three miles, was a mass of flames. Three soldiers who attempted to escape from the round-house were shot by the mob and instantly killed. Two citizens were also shot down. In the riot at 28th-street yesterday afternoon twenty were killed and twenty-nine wounded. The hill side was dotted with dead and dying. After leaving the arsenal to-day the Philadelphia troops turned their Gatling gun on the crowd with great loss of life. Thirty persons are killed, mostly strikers and citizens.

The Vigilance Committee is hourly growing stronger. It is thought that the destruction of life and property is at an end. It is estimated that 2,000 cars, loaded with oil, coal, and all kinds of merchandise, were totally destroyed, swell these, together with the locomotives, buildings, and other property destroyed, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's losses to an amount variously estimated at from three to four millions of dollars.

PITTSBURG July 28.—At Pittsburg the militia were not reinforced nor well supplied with ammunition. The police sympathized with the strikers. Five hundred well officered, resolute men would have saved five millions worth of property. The strike is over here, as the Pennsylvania road has nothing left to strike against.

While the Philadelphia militia were retreating a citizen, whose brother had been killed during Saturday's fight, snatched a gun from a lagging militia man and shot two soldiers dead. Two thousand freight cars were burned. The disgraceful feature of the Pittsburg riot was the refusal of the 14th and 19th Pennsylvania Regiments to serve longer, alleging as a reason the accidental killing of a private in the 14th Regiment by the Eastern militia.

The Mayor has issued a proclamation inviting the citizens to unite in stern measures for suppressing violence, ordering the saloons to be closed, and women and children off the streets. He says the riotous demonstrations must and shall be put down. The members of the Grand Army of the Republic and veterans are being called out for patrol duty. The measures taken will certainly prevent further violence. The strikers at 28th street have surrendered their arms, including three pieces of artillery, to the Citizens' Committee.

Business establishments have suspended and the employees have organized themselves into companies and tendered their services to the city. The services of the 19th Regiment have also been accepted. The City Council this morning pledged itself to meet the expenses incurred in suppressing violence. To-day the strikers seem universally disposed to assist the law-abiding citizens in saving property. The hopes of a compromise between the Fort Wayne men and their employers are ended. When this became known all the passengers, engineers, and fireman quitted their engines. No trains of any kind will go out this evening. On the Pennsylvania Railway there is no possible hope of a compromise. The Company says if the community can get along without the Pennsylvania Railroad the latter can get along without the strikers.

The scenes about the Union Depot to-day were not hard of description. All was desolation. The ruins of the passengers depot and Pan Handle buildings were covered with men and women digging with sticks and hands for plunder.

HARRISBURG Pa., July 22.—The train

were entirely consumed. Major-General Hancock has arrived, and assumed command of the United States troops. Four hundred regulars arrived this morning. As the troop from Fort Columbus marched from the depot to Cande Depot a few stones were thrown from the crowd, and one of the soldiers was struck. The assault was apparently unheeded but the assailant was arrested.

The railroad officials have just decided not to run any more trains over the road until the State and national authorities can insure the safety of property. Not a train is moving between this point and the Ohio River.

Nine persons are dead. Several will probably die, and about twenty were wounded.

CUMBERLAND, Md., July 21.—The rioters here and at Keyser have full sway. No trains are allowed to leave, but no personal violence is offered. The police are powerless. The strikers number 1,500. Some rioters were released from arrest last night because the Mayor feared the threats of the mob who surrounded the gaol. A number of freight cars were rifled by the mob this morning; children with bags and baskets assisting.

COLUMBUS, Ohio July 21.—All quiet at Newark. The shopmen joined the strikers this morning. The military number 179 men. The troops fraternize with the strikers, and refuse to fire on them. The Governor is telegraphing for more troops.

COLUMBUS, O., July 23.—A meeting of the Pan Handle firemen and brakemen on Saturday night resolved not to allow the passage of freight trains until an increase of wages be made to the scale of 1874. One of the speakers said their may not be the time, but the time may come to use the knife and apply the torch to restore the rights of the workmen sentiments loudly cheered by the crowd.

300 railroad strikers compelled the rolling-mill employees to suspend work. The employees of several large factories have joined the strikers. No violence yet.

The mob which raided the private establishments to-day closed up nearly all the rolling mills, machine shops, and factories on the west side of the river. The mob is not composed of railway men, but of tramps, miners, and idle roughs. No violence was offered, as the operative quit work and the shops suspended on the first demand. In a few instances protests were made, but invariably the reply was, "Shut up or burn up." War rants have been issued for the arrest of several leaders. The mob stopped freight for Springfield over the Cincinnati, Sandusky, and Cleveland Road. A large number of miners from Shawnee are on the way to Newark to join the strikers. A committee has started to meet the miners. The miners number upwards of 1,000. Word was received by the Mayor that 50 or 60 tramps had taken possession of a mail train at Cumberland and robbed the passengers. The Mayor summoned a force of policemen, and on the arrival of the train captured forty of the roughs, all of whom were armed. No resistance was made.

CLEVELAND, O., July 23.—A strike on the Lake Shore Road was inaugurated here at 2 p. m. Saturday at the Company's yard. The firemen and brakemen left the trains, and the engineers refused to run with green men. The Standard Oil Company, employing 2,000 men, shut down last night, there being no way of getting refined oil to market. The Cleveland Rolling mill, and other large manufacturing concerns will be obliged to close for want of coal and means of transporting their products.

A delegation of strikers waited on the engineers and firemen at the Lake Shore bloodshed? No: the law must be maintained in its supremacy and they who have a right to its protection irrespective of creed or party must be protected.

THE PREMIER SLANDERS.

Perhaps no other newspapers in the Dominion with one exception would be guilty of a gross and scurrilous attack on the Hon. ALEX. MACKENZIE as the following taken from the London Herald:

"Poor Hackett was murdered, foully murdered. His murderer was not the nameless villain who emptied his revolver into him, but the civic and Dominion authorities, who refused him that protection to which every British subject is entitled. But even Mayor Beaudry is only an accomplice in the affair. The real murderer of poor Hackett is the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the Premier of the Dominion. Had he declared that the Government would see the peace preserved at all risks poor Hackett would be alive to-day. But he was desirous to conciliate the Roman Catholic vote of Quebec, and the Orangemen were therefore given to understand that if they marched it would be at their own risk."

And the Toronto Leader sanctions the infamous slander by saying: at the "saddle was put upon the right horse." It is however, to the credit of the conservative press that they repudiate the scurrilous specimen of gratuitous insult. Whatever we might say in vindication of Mr. Mackenzie's conduct in the premises we shall allow his enemies to defend him from the attacks of London Herald. The Ottawa Citizen says:—

"We observe that a few of our contemporaries, evidently misled, are blaming Hon. Alex. Mackenzie for failing to put forth greater efforts to suppress or prevent the Montreal disturbance. This is unjust. In the first place, Mr. Mackenzie, as Premier, telegraphed that the Government would do all in its power to put down the mob, and we believe the Hon. R. W. Scott, who is acting Minister of Militia, exerted himself vigorously in the cause of peace and order. The Minister of Justice, M. Laflamme, also advised prompt measures so soon as the matter came before him in legal form, and the magistrates of Montreal had requested Governmental interference. To blame the Government, when they did all in their power to suppress the uprising, is both unfair and unpatriotic, and we regret that any journal should have been misled into doing either the Premier or his colleagues an injustice."

THE END NOT YET.

New York, July 29.—The Erie railway officials furnish the following:—Last evening a meeting of firemen and brakemen was held in Hornellsville, at the close of which a message was sent by a chairman to the Superintendent of the Erie railway, notifying him that the men on the Western Susquehanna and Buffalo divisions had resolved to quit work at one o'clock this morning. The Superintendent proceeded at once to Hornellsville, arriving there this morning and found the strikers had quit work and had taken measures to prevent any train to that belonging to private citizens. They kept their word, too, and when a lumber pile belonging to a citizen took fire the rioters themselves turned in and helped to extinguish the flames.

Train after train was fired by the infuriated crowd, but the cars were so far distant from the round-house that the heat did not seriously affect the military, although their position was one peril. Finally a large party of strikers captured a car filled with coke, which they ran from the Alleghany Valley Railway track to a siding connecting with the Pennsylvania Railroad. They then procured large quantities of petroleum oil, and pouring it over the coke ignited the materials. In a very few moments the car was a mass of fire, and it was then pushed along the tracks and forced against the round-house. The building was soon ignited, but did not burn as rapidly as desired, and the mob rushed out on the road and sent burning trains towards the buildings. From midnight until five this morning the main efforts of the crowd were directed to firing buildings and cars, but about half an hour later the mob which had been besieging the military left for some unexplained reason. This afforded the troops, who were in actual danger of being roasted alive, an opportunity to emerge from the building. They quickly marched up to 33rd street, and thence to Pennsylvania avenue and Butler-street. Their objective point was the United States Arsenal in Butler-street, where they expected to obtain shelter. While turning into Butler-st., however, the rioters discovered their retreat. Quite 1,000, fully armed and supplied with ammunition, followed in pursuit. Some of the troops fired at the citizens, either accidentally or intentionally, as they were moving along. When they reached the arsenal the commandant refused to admit them. He said he had but ten men, and would be powerless to hold the place if the mob should attack it. He consented to take care of the wounded, and they were accordingly carried into the hospitals. The main body of the troops continued their march up Butler-street, a fusillade being kept up on them by the mob. As they moved forward shots were fired, and killed one of the soldiers before they reached the arsenal, a mile above the arsenal, two others were killed and were left lying on the sidewalk. They continued their fight, and crossed over to the north side of the Alleghany River on Sharpshooter Bridge, the mob following them as rapidly as possible. After reaching the north side the troops scattered, and in this way the mob was divided into very small bodies. In the meantime the city was in a state of anarchy. Thousands who had joined in pursuit of the fleeing troops gathered about the burning buildings and trains, and assisted in spreading the flames. By seven o'clock the fire had extended, and enveloped hundreds of cars. The railroad buildings destroyed were as follows:—Two round-houses, one machine shop, Superintendent's office, car repair shop, blacksmith's shops, three or four oil houses, Union Transfer Depot and offices, dispatching office, powder house, Union Depot, Hotel, Pan Handle Railway engine house, general offices and freight depot, and freight depot of the Adam Express Co. In the round houses were 125 first-class locomotives, which were totally destroyed.

The scenes transpired on Liberty-street along the line of which the tracks of the railroad run, simply beggar description. While hundreds were engaged in firing the cars and making certain of the destruction of the valuable buildings at the center depot, thousands of men, women, and children were engaged in pillaging the cars. Men armed with heavy sledges would break open the cars, and their contents would be thrown out and carried off by these bent on profiting by the reign of terror existing. The street was almost completely blocked by persons labouring to carry off the plunder they had gathered together. In hundreds of instances wagons were pressed into the service to enable the thieves to get away with their loads. Mayor Mc-

Mayo has issued a proclamation inviting the citizens to unite in stern measures for suppressing violence, ordering the saloons to be closed, and women and children off the streets. He says the riotous demonstrations must and shall be put down. The members of the Grand Army of the Republic and veterans are being called out for patrol duty. The measures taken will certainly prevent further violence. The strikers at 28th street have surrendered their arms, including three pieces of artillery, to the Citizens' Committee.

Business establishments have suspended and the employees have organized themselves into companies and tendered their services to the city. The services of the 19th Regiment have also been accepted. The City Council this morning pledged itself to meet the expenses incurred in suppressing violence. To-day the strikers seem universally disposed to assist the law-abiding citizens in saving property. The hopes of a compromise between the Fort Wayne men and their employers are ended. On the Pennsylvania Railway there is no possible hope of a compromise. The Company says if the community can get along without the Pennsylvania Railroad the latter can get along without the strikers.

The scenes about the Union Depot to-day were not hard of description. All was desolation. The ruins of the passengers depot and Pan Handle buildings were covered with men and women digging with sticks and hands for plunder. HARRISBURG, Pa., July 22.—The train conveying militia to Pittsburg was looted and stoned here. The police made one arrest and were also stoned by the mob. The coupling pins of an eastward-bound freight train were removed during the few minutes it stopped here. Others were substituted, and the train moved on without further difficulty.

About five o'clock the fire from the Union Depot communicated to the immense grain elevator on the corner of Grant and Washington-streets, containing a large quantity of grain. The destruction of these buildings seemed to satisfy the rioters, as they began to disperse while they were burning. At the adjourned meeting of the citizens, Vigilance Committees were organized to prevent further destruction of property. It was rapidly recruited, and each member of the first was provided with baseball bats, but these were afterwards exchanged for guns. The indications now are the reign of the mob is over, although threats have been made that several railroad buildings will be fired this evening.

ALTOONA, Pa., July 22.—A train of soldiers which reached here en route for Pittsburg was stopped by the strikers and the engines take therefrom. One company stacked their arms and refused to do anything. Another company tried to connect an engine to the train, but was attacked and driven off. The whole train of soldiers now here is under complete control of the strikers.

COLUMBIA, Pa., July 22.—The Pennsylvania Railroad men struck about two o'clock. The round house has been quietly closed. No engines are allowed to leave. No disorder.

HARRISBURG, 23.—A portion of the Philadelphia City troops en route from Altoona to Philadelphia disembarked from the cars a few miles west of Harrisburg, and are now working their way towards Philadelphia, avoiding Harrisburg. Immense crowds still remain about the depots.

The Pennsylvania Railroad strikers have held a meeting at which resolutions deprecating violence were adopted. The dismissal of Frank Thomas, General Manager, was asked, and a committee was appointed to inform Superintendent McCrea that they were willing to compromise on honourable terms, and would use every effort to protect the Company's property.

The mob forced Allen's gun stores and seized a quantity of arms. The Mayor induced them to return part of the plunder. 600 strikers crossed the river

yet. The mob which raided the private establishments to-day closed up nearly the rolling mills, machine shops, and tories on the west side of the river. Mob is not composed of railway men, of tramps, miners, and idle roughs. Violence was offered, as the opera quit work and the shops suspended the first demand. In a few instants protests were made, but invariably reply was, "Shut up or burn up." Vagrants have been issued for the arrest several leaders. The mob stopped for Springfield over the Cincinnati, dusky, and Cleveland Road. A number of miners from Shawnee are the way to Newark to join the strike. A committee has started to meet miners. The miners number upward 1,000. Word was received by the M. that 50 or 60 tramps had taken possession of a mail train at Cumberland and bed the passengers. The Mayor summoned a force of policemen, and on arrival of the train captured forty of roughs, all of whom were armed. Resistance was made.

CLEVELAND, O., July 23.—A street on the Lake Shore Road was inaugurated here at 2 p. m. Saturday at the Company's yard. The firemen and br men left the trains, and the engine refused to run with green men. Standard Oil Company, employing 2 men, shut down last night, there being no way of getting refined oil to run the Cleveland Rolling mill, and a large manufacturing concerns will be obliged to close for want of coal and means of transporting their products.

A delegation of strikers waited on engineers and firemen of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad at Air Line junction, and ordered them to run their engines into the round-house. The order was complied with.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22nd.—The Governor has ordered that every military company in the State, and telegraph the President for United States troops.

BUFFALO, N. Y., 23.—A mob reinforced by large numbers, called at the shop of the Lake Shore and Erie Companies and ordered the work men to quit which they did forthwith. No more demonstrations are being made. In the afternoon an assault by no 2,000 rioters was made on the militia about 200 men, guarded the Lake Shore round-house. The militia were obliged to leave the building, which is barricaded by the mob, and the cars placed in position as a defence against an attack.

Each of the 68th Regiment, with all thirty men and three officers, took proceeded to the round-house by attacking it from the mob. They met with yells of derision from the mob and a shower of stones, and were obliged to retreat at the double quick and follow their way through the yelling crowd, the point of the bayonet, some of the soldiers being badly cut on the face while four lost their noses. One of them being knocked down and forced to take refuge in the Lake Shore round-house, engineers of the Erie and Lake Shore signed an agreement with the firemen to run with green hands.

A mob from the Erie and Lake Shore roads this morning took the firemen's brakemen from Central trains, unlocked the stock, and warned the employ from further work.

The strikers will not allow stock move east on the New York Central.

STRIKERS' TERMS.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., July 22.—Everything is quiet this morning.

At noon a committee of strikers waited on the railway officials, and stated their terms as follows:—Brakemen to go work at reduced wages, and the Company to pay for extra hours that they work; switchmen the same; if not to constitute the lay's work, firemen to be paid according to years of service, $1, $1.90, $2.05, and $2.15, substantially reduction of ten per cent; firemen to be promoted according to merit and years service; trackmen in Hornellsville, N. Y. to receive $1.50 and on section $1.75 with free rental of the Company's house along the track, unless agreements to put down the mob, and we believe the Hon. R. W. Scott, who is acting Minister of Militia, exerted himself vigorously in the cause of peace and order. The Minister of Justice, M. Laflamme, also advised prompt measures so soon as the matter came before him in legal form, and the magistrates of Montreal had requested Governmental interference. NEW YORK, July 20.—The Erie railway officials furnish the following:—Last evening a meeting of firemen and brakemen was held in Hornellsville, at the close of which a message was sent by a chairman to the Superintendent of the Erie railway, notifying him that the men on the Western Susquehanna and Buffalo divisions had resolved to quit work at one o'clock this morning. The Superintendent proceeded at once to Hornellsville, arriving there this morning and found the strikers had quit work and had taken measures to prevent any train, passenger or freight, from leaving or passing through Hornellsville, east or west. Simultaneously the firemen, brakemen and switchmen at Salamanca, on the western division, quit work, and when the Superintendent of that division arrived at Salamanca his engine was cut loose from the train and put into the engine house, and the strikers notified him no engine or train would be permitted to pass Salamanca. At another station, on the western division, one of the striking firemen took the engine and went on the main road without orders or permission from the Company, and on the line of the trains, intending, he said to go to Hornellsville.

The reduction in the wages by the Erie Railway Company of ten per cent on July 1st applied only to the above classes of employees, who were not affected by the reduction of the previous year, and with this reduction in effect the train and road hands now receive higher compensation than on any other eastern road. All classes of men on the Erie have been treated by the Company with consideration. Their pay is not only reasonable but liberal, for the times, and if there are any employees expressing dissatisfaction, the Receiver is ready to pay them off promptly and hire other men in their places, and expresses his determination to carry out the order of July 1st to the letter. The Erie Company has arranged to have its through passengers and baggage carried via N. Y. C. R. until its own trains resume running.

PITTSBURG, July 22.—The crisis of the railway strike in this city on Friday night was reached yesterday afternoon about five o'clock, when the Philadelphia troops who had been sent here to suppress the strikers fired upon the crowd. The terribly fatal effects of the shots fired by the troops exasperated the citizens as well as strikers, and in less than an hour a thousand fighting men from the rolling mills, coal mines, and various manufacturing establishments hurried to the scene of the main body of the troops continued their march up Butler-street, a fusillade being kept up on them by the mob. As they moved forward shots were fired, and killed one of the soldiers before they reached the arsenal, a mile above the arsenal, two others were killed and were left lying on the sidewalk. They continued their fight, and crossed over to the north side of the Allegheny River on Sharpshoot Bridge, the mob following them as rapidly as possible. After reaching the north side the troops scattered, and in this way the mob was divided into very small bodies. In the meantime the city was in a state of anarchy. Thousands who had joined in pursuit of the fleeing troops gathered about the burning buildings and trains, and assisted in spreading the flames. By seven o'clock the fire had extended, and enveloped hundreds of cars. The railroad buildings destroyed were as follows:—Two round-houses, one machine shop, Superintendent's office, car repair shop, blacksmith's shops, three or four oil houses, Union Transfer Depot and offices, messenger's office, powder house, Union Depot, Hotel, Pan Handle Railway engine house, general offices and freight depot, and freight depot of the Adam Express Co. In the round houses were 125 first-class locomotives, which were totally destroyed.

The scenes transpired on Liberty-street along the line of which the tracks of the railroad run, simply beggar description. While hundreds were engaged in firing the cars and making certain of the destruction of the valuable buildings at the center depot, thousands of men, women, and children were engaged in pillaging the cars. Men armed with heavy sledges would break open the cars, and their contents would be thrown out and carried off by those bent on profiting by the reign of terror existing. The street was almost completely blocked by persons labouring to carry off the plunder they had gathered together. In hundreds of instances waggons were pressed into the service to enable the thieves to get away with their goods. Mayor McCarty early in the day endeavored to stop the pillage, but the handful of men at his command were unable to control the crowd. The pillage was checked but the mob fired the cars, and then proceeded with the work of destruction. It is impossible to form any idea of the amount of goods stolen, but hundreds of thousands of dollars will not cover the loss.

Here a brawny woman could be seen hurrying away with a pair of white kid slippers under her arms. Another, carrying an infant, would be rolling a barrel of flour alongside the walk, using her feet as propelling power, &c.

At eleven o'clock it became apparent that some thing must be done to check the mob, and a number of citizens hurriedly prepared notices calling a mass meeting of citizens at the old City Hall to take measures to prevent further destruction of property. The meeting was held at noon, and a large number of leading citizens responded to the call. It was decided to appoint a Committee, consisting principally of clergymen, to have a conference with the rioters, while another Committee was appointed to wait on the railroad authorities to ascertain what course they intended to pursue, or suggest a compromise that would put an end to the disorder. The committee to wait on the rioters failed to induce them to refrain from further destruction of property, and the railroad authorities could not be found. It is stated that the ringleaders were men who had never been employed on any railroad.

The fire department were on duty from the time of the first alarm, but were not allowed to throw any water on or make any effort to save the property of the Railway Company. They consequently directed their efforts to saving private property. In this they were mainly successful, although dwellings and a sash factory were destroyed. Early in the day, when the Union Depot building was fired, followed by the Pan Handle offices, a panic seized the citizens, who had up to message grain elevator on the corner of Grant and Washington-streets, containing a large quantity of grain. The destruction of these buildings seemed to satisfy the rioters, as they began to disperse while they were burning. At the adjourned meeting of the citizens, Vigilance Committees were organized to prevent further destruction of property. It was rapidly recruited, and each member of the first was provided with baseball bats, but these were afterwards exchanged for guns. The indications now are the reign of the mob is over, although threats have been made that several railroad buildings will be fired this evening.

ALTOONA, Pa., July 22.—A train of soldiers which reached here en route for Pittsburg was stopped by the strikers and the engines take therefrom. One company stacked their arms and refused to do anything. Another company tried to connect an engine to the train, but was attacked and driven off. The whole train of soldiers now here is under complete control of the strikers.

COLUMBIA, Pa., July 22.—The Pennsylvania Railroad men struck about two o'clock. The round house has been quietly closed. No engines are allowed to leave. No disorder.

HARRISBURG, 23.—A portion of the Philadelphia City troops en route from Altoona to Philadelphia disembarked from the cars a few miles west of Harrisburg, and are now working their way towards Philadelphia, avoiding Harrisburg. Immense crowds still remain about the depots.

The Pennsylvania Railroad strikers have held a meeting at which resolutions deprecating violence were adopted. The dismissal of Frank Thomas, General Manager, was asked, and a committee was appointed to inform Superintendent McCrea that they were willing to compromise on honourable terms, and would use every effort to protect the Company's property.

The mob forced Altamire's gun stores and seized a quantity of arms. The Mayor induced them to return part of the plunder. 600 strikers crossed the river in search of the Philadelphia militiamen, and returned with 25 men of the First and Second Regiments as their prisoners.

READING, Pa., July 23.—The strikers have burned a train of five freight cars, and the Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge across the Schuylkill, costing $150,000, to prevent the passage of troops.

A collision between the Fourth Militia and the rioters occurred on the track, which the mob were tearing up. The soldiers were assailed with stones, and immediately commenced firing without orders. The firing was indiscriminate, the bullets doing bad work among the immense concourse of people, among whom are many respectable citizens, as well as ladies and children. Five persons have been killed, and from eighteen to twenty-five wounded, several mortally. Numbers of others are wounded who escaped in the crowd. Among the wounded are several members of the police force. Numbers of soldiers were knocked down and injured by large stones. The mob broke into the armoury of the Reading Rifles, and have also taken all the weapons from a gun store. They threaten vengeance on the military. The mob is now engaged in tearing up the railroad tracks, and there is a blockade of accumulated freight and coal cars. The railroad company has a strong guard stationed around all their machine shops and other buildings in the city.

Bars of iron were discovered on the track, intended to throw off the train which brought the Schuylkill militia.

BALTIMORE, July 22.—Fifteen minutes before three this morning an incendiary fired a train of thirty-five or forty cars loaded with crude petroleum, at the Viaduct Station, a short distance beyond the city limits. The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes the cars of a train on an adjoining track were also on fire. A locomotive was sent out from Camden Station, and that portion of the train not on fire drawn off amid the jeers and cries of the strikers. Nine cars, containing from 300 to 350 barrels of oil, shop of the Lake Shore and Erie Companies and ordered the workmen to quit, which they did forthwith. No serious demonstrations are being made. Early in the afternoon an assault by nearly 2,000 rioters was made on the military, about 200 men, guarded the Lake Shore round-house. The military were obliged to leave the building, which is barricaded by the mob, and the cars placed in position as a defence against an attack. Col. Flach, of the 6th Regiment, with about thirty men and three officers, foolishly proceeded to the round-house to attempt retaking it from the mob. They were met with yells of derision from the crowd and a shower of stones and were obliged to retreat at the double quick and force their way through the yelling crowd at the point of the bayonet, some of the soldiers being badly cut in the head, while four lost their noses. Col. Flach being knocked down and forced to take refuge in the Lake Shore round-house. The engineers of the Erie and Lake Shore signed an agreement with the strikers not to run with green flags.

A mob from the Erie and Lake Shore roads this morning took the firemen and brakemen from Central trains, unloaded the stock, and warned the employees from further work.

The strikers will not allow stock to move east on the New York Central.

STRIKERS' TERMS.

HORNELLVILLE, N. Y., July 23.—Everything is quiet this morning.

At noon a committee of strikers waited on the railway officials, and stated their terms as follows:—Brakemen to go to work at reduced wages, and the Company to pay for extra hours that they may work; switchmen the same, if ten hours constitute the day's work, firemen to be paid according to years of service, $1.60, $1.90, $2.03, and $2.15, substantially a reduction of ten per cent; firemen to be promoted according to merit and years of service; trackmen in Hornellsville yard to receive $1.50 and on section $1.40, with free rental of the Company's land along the track, unless agreements are made otherwise; passes to be issued as heretofore; all committees of men discharged to be reinstated. The Erie officials replied that they could not accept the terms and had no new ones to offer. Receiver Jewett has issued a notice to the employees stating that he believes that a large majority of the employees now neglecting their duty are acting under coercion and terror of lawless and desperate men, most of whom are strangers and have never been in his service. All well disposed employees will be protected. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of some of the leaders.

IN CANADA.

The railroad labor difficulty has penetrated into Canada, the employees of the Canada Southern at St. Thomas having struck at noon on the 24th. Messages were sent along the line to stop all trains, and the mid-day train from the east had a hard time to get through. A meeting of the strikers was held last night for the purpose of giving vent to their grievance. There is no trouble on either the Grand Trunk or Great Western, the latest intelligence respecting the latter road being a report of a compromise for a term of three months on the basis of a reduction of 2 1/2 per cent. on wages below $45 per month, and of 5 per cent. on wages above that figure.

We have given an account (as far as our space will permit) of the tactics of the rioters and the most desperate scenes attendant upon the strike, which has affected over 80 railways all over the Union. The loss of property is immense, and the number of killed and wounded cannot now be estimated. The strike still continues but the worst is believed to be over. Business is at a complete stand still.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 23.—The Central Pacific Railroad has rescinded the 10 per cent. reduction of June 1st, and will hereafter pay full wages in silver.

The mob is not composed of railway men, but of miners, and idle roughs. No violence was offered, as the operatives work and the shops suspended on first demand. In a few instances tests were made, but invariably the result was, "Shut up or burn up." Warrants have been issued for the arrest of several leaders. The mob stopped freight trains over the Cincinnati, Sandy, and Cleveland Road. A large number of miners from Shawnee are on way to Newark to join the strikers. A committee has started to meet the miners. The miners number upwards of 100. Word was received by the Mayor that 50 or 60 tramps had taken possession of a mail train at Cumberland and robbed the passengers. The Mayor summoned a force of policemen, and on the arrival of the train captured forty of the tramps, all of whom were armed. No violence was made.

CLEVELAND, O., July 23.—A strike of the Lake Shore Road was inaugurated at 2 p. m. Saturday at the Company's yard. The firemen and brakemen left the trains, and the engineers used to run with green men. The Standard Oil Company, employing 2,000 men, shut down last night, there being no way of getting refined oil to market. The Cleveland Rolling mill, and other manufacturing concerns will be obliged to close for want of coal and means of transporting their products. A delegation of strikers waited on the engineers and firemen of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad at the Line junction, and ordered them to put their engines into the round-house. An order was complied with.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22nd.—The Governor has ordered out every military company in the State, and telegraphed a President for United States troops. BUFFALO, N. Y., 23.—A mob reinforced by large numbers, called at the car shop of the Lake Shore and Erie Companies and ordered the workmen to quit, which they did forthwith. No serious demonstrations are being made. Early in the afternoon an assault by nearly 100 rioters was made on the military, but 200 men, guarded the Lake Shore round-house. The military were obliged to leave the building, which is barricaded by the mob, and the cars placed in position as a defence against attack. Col. Ach. of the 6th Regiment, with about thirty men and three officers, foolishly proceeded to the round-house to attempt taking it from the mob. They were met with yells of derision from the crowd and a shower of stones and were obliged to retreat at the double-quick and force their way through the yelling crowd at a point of the bayonet, some of the officers being badly cut in the head, and one lost his arm. They were then knocked down and obliged to take refuge in the Lake Shore car shop. The engineers of the Erie and Lake Shore signed an agreement with the firemen not to run with green hands.

A mob from the Erie and Lake Shore roads this morning took the firemen and mechanics from Central trains, unloaded the stock, and warned the employees from further work. The strikers will not allow stock to move east on the New York Central.

STRIKERS' TERMS.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., July 23.—Everything is quiet this morning. At noon a committee of strikers waited on the railway officials, and stated their terms as follows: Brakemen to go to work at reduced wages, and the Company to pay for extra hours that they may work; switchmen the same, if ten hours constitute the day's work; firemen to be paid according to years of service, $1.60, $1.90, $2.03, and $2.41, substantially a reduction of ten per cent; firemen to be promoted according to merit and years of service; trackmen in Hornellsville yard to receive $1.50 and on section $1.40, 10 per cent of the Company's haul.

STRIKE TERMS.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., July 23.—Everything is quiet this morning.

At noon a committee of strikers waited on the railway officials, and stated their terms as follows: Broken men are to go to work at reduced wages and their employer to pay for extra hours that they may work; switchmen the same, if ten hours constitute the day's work; firemen to be paid according to years of service, $1.60, $1.90, $2.03, and $2.11, substantially a reduction of ten per cent; firemen to be promoted according to merit and years of service; trackmen in Hornellsville yard to receive $1.50 and on section $1.40, with free rental of the Company's land over the track, unless agreements are made otherwise; passes to be issued as heretofore; all committees of men discharged to be reinstated. The Erie officials replied that they could not accept the terms and had no new ones to offer. Receiver Jewett has issued a notice to the employees stating that he believes that a large majority of the employees are now neglecting their duty, are acting under coercion and terror of lawless and desperate men, most of whom are strangers and have never been in his service. All well disposed employees will be protected. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of some of the leaders.

IN CANADA.

The railroad labor difficulty has penetrated into Canada, the employees of the Canada Southern at St. Thomas having struck at noon on the 24th. Messages were sent along the line to stop all trains, and the mid-day train from the east had a hard time to get through. A meeting of the strikers was held last night for the purpose of giving vent to their grievance. Robbing Her Majesty.

One of the brave volunteers, while rusticated in the shade of a beech tree, had his bayonet forcibly taken from its sheath by a civilian. The man who had the temerity to thus insult one of our country's defenders, has since compromised the matter satisfactorily, and the 'sodger' has escaped the penalty of a 'trunk head court martial.'

The Moonlight Excursion.

This affair came off on Monday evening. The steamer City of Kingston left Bowey's Dock at 7 p. m., carrying about 200 excursionists, (dadies free) she went as far as Northport, and after cruising around the Bay, returned early on Tuesday morning. The moonlit night was lovely. Dancing, music, and the courteous attentions of Capt. Price served to fill out a programme which was most thoroughly enjoyed.

Runaway.

On Tuesday evening, three gay and festive young gents were taking an airing out John street. Their nag—feeling his oats—suddenly started off at a break-neck pace, he was finally turned into Thomas street, and brought to a stand still by a drove of captured cows, near the stock yard of John Windrim Esq. The occupants were thrown out, unhurt, and the dashboard kicked in, but otherwise no injury was done.

The Firemen's Excursion

On Tuesday evening the firemen, preceded by the band, paraded the streets in their new uniforms, Wednesday morning, the excursion by steamer New York, with a large crowd of passengers, started for Kingston, as the steamer passed down the river she rode beautifully, causing several to disembark at Mill Point and Bath, reaching Kingston at 6 p. m. and returned to Nanpess at 5 a. m. on Thursday morning, with a most sleepy-looking set, who were well satisfied that the trip was the cheapest of the season—a day and a night with board and lodging for the small sum of 50 cents.

"Teachers' Examination."

The following is a list of the successful candidates for third class certificates:—(In order of merit.) John A. Monroe; Wm. Kaylor; Mary C. Baker, Mary Connors, (equal); Edith Ponery and Wilma Preston, (equal); Samuel Mellow, Thos. Woods; William Lewis; Esther Sweet; Bella Whightman; Annie Lenahan; Lizzie McLaren; Minnie Lewis; Frances Stratton; Kate Perleaux; Geo. Davy; John P. Moore; Phebe Chislett; Daniel Donovan; Addie Empey; John R. Smoot; Josephine Armstrong. The following candidates for renewals of third class having failed to reach the standard required by the Board, will be awarded Interim Certificates on the requisition of Boards of Trustees requiring their services:—(In order of merit,) Laura Shattuck; I. B. Yourex; Jane Rogers; Robert R. Lennox; Elmira Ash; Margaret Hally; Thomas Hart; Christina Wolson; Ella James; Annie Trotman; Maggie Shannon; Agnes Jones; Catherine Donovan. For new third class, it was necessary that candidates should reach 40 per cent in Grammar and Arithmetic, for renewals, 50 per cent in each of those subjects, and for both classes 50 per cent of the aggregate possible marks. Those candidates who have been successful in obtaining new certificates will be required to attend the Model School before certificates can be issued. This regulation does not apply to renewals.

Marine Statistics

Below is a statement, showing the number of British and Foreign vessels that arrived and cleared at this Port, with tonnage, and number of seamen during the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1877.

VESSELS ARRIVED.

ing the holiday season in the country. No class needs recreation, more than school teachers, and none are more deserving of it, than our own painstaking townsmen.

Oddfellow's Excursion.

The I. O. O. F. from Nanpess will take the City of Kingston, on Wednesday next—the 1st of August, for Massawag Point, to participate in a complimentary picnic to the Ontario Grand Lodge from Bellville. A yacht race and other amusements will be sure to draw a large attendance. Excursion leaves Bowey's Dock at 6:30 a. m. Return tickets 50 cts.

The Juvenile Templars.

This excursion started on Thursday morning, by the City of Kingston. The New York—previously engaged—was not accepted, owing, we are told, to some misunderstanding regarding her late trip. The boat is perfectly safe and seaworthy, but the immense crowd on deck caused her to dip a little, to which any boat is liable under similar circumstances.

Dredging.

The contract for dredging the river has not been awarded to Mr. Daily, but to Mr. McCabe, of Trenton, whose tender was the lowest. The Government Engineer, Mr. Kingsford, and the Dredging Superintendent, had an interview with the Mayor and other officials on Monday night, on Tuesday they inspected the river. The construction of a turning basin and removal of all obstructions is included in the contract.

Cowardly.

Last Saturday or Sunday night, some parties expressed their total want of principle, by tearing down all the large posters of the Orange Young Britons' excursion from Nanpess to Wells Island on the 6th of August. We are informed that some of the parties are well known, and will be prosecuted, which they justly deserve. Such conduct as the above cannot be condemned in too strong terms, and any person who would stoop so low as to destroy posted bills of any excursion, whether it be Roman Catholic, St. Patrick, Protestant, Orange, or any other should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Orange Young Britons' Excursion.

This excursion to Wells' Island, on Monday the 6th August, promises to be the event of the season. The Maud, the most popular and snugly-fitted-up excursion steamer on the Bay, will leave Bowey's Dock, foot of Robert street, at 6:30 a. m., Mill Point 7:30, Smith's wharf, Adolphustown and Bath at 9. Kingston 12, noon, arriving at Wells' Island early in the afternoon. The Nanpess Brass and String Band, and the Fife and Drum Band, (composed of 18 members,) from Kingston, will be in attendance. The great Temperance Camp Meeting is in session, and the famous liberal temperance revivalist, Francis Murphy, will be present, together with other notables. After landing at the Island, the steamer will take parties to and from Alexandra Bay. Tickets from Nanpess and Mill Point, single, 75 cts., double, $1.25. Adolphustown, Smith's Wharf and Bath, 50 cts., Kingston 25 cts. A map of the Thousand Island Park, can be seen at the Express Office.

The Volunteers.

The annual drill of the Nanpess Battery Garrison Artillery closed on Tuesday. A close inspection was made by Col. Struwbizie and Major Cotton. The gentlemen's dress, movement, and gun practice stood a severe test, the Inspector complimenting the men very highly on their proficiency, dress, and soldierly appearance. On Sunday the Company headed by the band, attended the Presbyterian church in uniform, and listened to an eloquent sermon by the Rev. Mr. Young, text 2 Samuel x 12 after service the Company proceeded to the Market Square, and were dismissed. On Friday shooting practice at 200, 400 and Constantinople, there is no excuse for a panic in England. It calls on Russia to punish Cossacks who committed outrages.

Wimbleton.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA CHALLENGE TROPHY.

The Standard in its report of the Wimbleton meeting on the 12th inst., has the following:—

The point of interest, however, is the Dominion of Canada Challenge Trophy, which has excited the admiration of all beholders. It is a splendid work of art, manufactured by Messrs. Elkington & Co., from designs by Mr. Wyon, of Regent street. It is a massive silver shield. In the centre is an emblematic figure of Canada, and round it are grouped in seven sections representation of the seven triumphs of Rome. Forming an outer circle to these groups are the coats of arms of the seven Canadian Provinces set in enamel; and on an outer rim of polished ebony are set the monograms of the seven Provinces of Canada in letters of solid gold. The shield revolves on a concealed pivot, but apparently it is supported on a pedestal about ten inches in height, formed of Canadian maple oak, and pine. The shield is of silver repousse work, relieved by bands of plain gold, and valued at £700. It bears an engraved inscription as follows:—

"Challenge shield presented to the National Rifle association by the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, to mark the donors' appreciation of the generous and kind receptions extended to the Canadian riflemen at Wimbleton—A. D. 1870-1877." The trophy will be held for a year by the battalion to which the competitor belongs who wins the first prize in the "grand aggregate."

The Barley Crop.

The Belleville Intelligencer says:—Judging from the samples sent us withing the past few days, the barley crop of this section—the best barley crop in America—will be of the very best quality, and the yield will be excellent and the color of the brightest. One sample in particular, from the farm of Mr. Geo. Anderson, in Ameliasburgh, shows that the grain is very plump, and bright in color, which are the great desiderata in securing a good crop and the highest market price. A great deal of barley has been cut within ten days past, and the general report is very favourable. One matter we would urge upon our farmers, namely, that they must clean their barley thoroughly. Otherwise, an inferior article better cleaned will secure a higher price. We have urged this for years past, but with indifferent effect, and the consequence has been not only a lowering of the price, but the driving away of dealers, who must have a good and clean article. They found the quality here, but the dirty state of the grain drove them to other parts where they were content to buy a little poorer article at the top price. In justice to themselves, our farmers ought to pay strict attention to this important matter.

The railroad strike causes a general advance here in beef, butter, and Western produce.

LONDON, July 23.—The whale-boat New Bedford, with Capt. Crapo and wife, from New Bedford, Mass., has arrived at Cornwall.

Several of the 12th of July voters at Charlottetown have been committed for trial in the Supreme Court; others are still under examination.

The crop reports from Nebraska and Western Iowa are most favourable, indicating the largest yield of all kinds of grain for years.

The Spanish authorities are preparing to send 25,000 men to Cuba in October to fill gaps caused by disease and death.

CHEYENNE, WY., July 23.—The reduction of wages of the Union Pacific road, ordered on July the 1st, has been received.

in the new morning, the excursion by steamer New York, with a large crowd of passengers, started for Kingston, as the steamer passed down the river she roared beautifully, causing several to disembark at Mill Point and Bath, reaching Kingston at 6 p. m. and returned to Napanee at 5 a. m. on Thursday morning, with a most sleepy-looking set, who were well satisfied that the trip was the cheapest of the season—a day and a night with board and lodging for the small sum of 50 cents.

Teachers' Examination.

posters of the Orange Young Britons' excursion from Napanee to Wells Island on the 6th of August. We are informed that some of the parties are well known, and will be prosecuted, which they justly deserve. Such conduct as the above cannot be condemned in too strong terms, and any person who would stoop so low as to destroy posted bills of any excursion, whether it be Roman Catholic, St. Patrick, Protestants, Orange, or any other should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Orange Young Britons' Excursion.

This excursion to Wells' Island, on Monday the 6th August, promises to be the event of the season. The Maud, the most popular and finely-fitted-up excursion steamer on the Bay of Quinte, will leave Bowey's Dock, foot of Robert Street, at 6:30 a. m., Mill Point 7:30, Smith's wharf, Adolphustown and Bath at 9. Kingston 12, noon, arriving at Wells' Island early in the afternoon. The Napanee Brass and String Band, and the Fife and Drum Band, (composed of 18 members,) from Kingston, will be in attendance. The great Temperance Camp Meeting is in session, and the famous liberal temperance revivalist, Francis Murphy, will be present, together with other notables. After landing at the Island, the steamer will take parties to and from Alexandra Bay. Tickets from Napanee and Mill Point, single, 75 cts., double, $1.25. Adolphustown, Smith's Wharf and Bath, 50 cts., Kingston 25 cts. A map of the Thousand Island Park, can be seen at the EXPRESS Office.

The Volunteers.

The annual drill of the Napanee Battery, Garrison Artillery closed on Tuesday. A close inspection was made by Col. Straubenzie and Major Cotton. The equipments, dress, movement, and gun practice stood a severe test, the Inspector complimenting the men very highly on their proficiency, dress, and soldierly appearance. On Sunday the Company headed by the band, attended the Presbyterian church in uniform, and listened to an eloquent sermon by the Rev. Mr. Young, text 2 Samuel x 12 after service the Company proceeded to the Market Square, and were dismissed. On Friday, shooting practice at 200, 400, and 500 yards. Mr. C. Terry of Mitchell, came very near being scalped at Stratford on Dominion Day, not by the tomahawk of the Indian, but through a foolish freak of his own. He engaged in a boys' race, one feature of which was that the contestants were to pass on their "four" through a flour barrel. In his desire to get through first, Terry made a desperate plunge for the barrel, but not having lowered his head sufficiently it struck on the sharp ends of the staves, tearing the scalp completely from the skull. The injured man is progressing favourably.

The Barley Crop.

The Belleville Intelligencer says:—Judging from the samples sent us with the past few days, the barley crop of this section—the best barley crop in America—will be of the very best quality, and the yield will be excellent and the color of the brightest. One sample in particular, from the farm of Mr. Geo. Anderson, in Ameliasburgh, shows that the grain is very plump, and bright in color, which are the great desiderata in securing a good crop and the highest market price. A great deal of barley has been cut within ten days past, and the general report is very favourable. One matter we would urge upon our farmers, namely, that they must clean their barley thoroughly. Otherwise, an inferior article after cleaned will secure a higher price. We have urged this for years past, but with indifferent effect, and the consequence has been not only a lowering of the price, but the drying away of dealers, who must have a good and clean article. They found the quality here, but the dirty state of the grain, drove them to other parts where they were content to buy a little poorer article at the top price. In justice to themselves, our farmers ought to pay strict attention to this important matter.

The railroad strike causes a general advance here in beef, butter, and Western produce.

LONDON, July 23.—The whale-boat New Bedford, with Capt. Crapo and wife, from New Bedford, Mass., has arrived at Cornwall.

Several of the 12th of July rioters at Charlottetown have been committed for trial in the Supreme Court; others are still under examination.

The crop reports from Nebraska and Western Iowa are most favourable, indicating the largest yield of all kinds of grain for years.

The Spanish authorities are preparing to send 25,000 men to Cuba in October to fill gaps caused by disease and death.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 23.—The reduction of wages of the Union Pacific road, ordered on July the 1st, has been rescinded, and the employees are satisfied.

DETROIT, July 23.—The firemen, switchmen, and brakemen on the Canada Southern at Slocum and Detroit Junctions have struck.

The World says Jay Gould at Long Branch yesterday predicted a monarchy, and said he would give a million dollars to see Grant in the White House.

An alarming accident occurred in Rye, Mass., at the public wedding of a clergyman. It was intended to fire a cannon just as the bridal party left the altar, but owing to some mistake it was not fired until some seventy-five people were had come from the church and were standing in front of it, when the gun exploded with such force that it drove large pieces through the church, and other pieces that weighed fifteen pounds were thrown almost a quarter of a mile. Two persons were injured.

At the Bristol (Eng.) Board of Guardians meeting a letter addressed from Quebec to one of the guardians, from a girl, named Polly McKinnon, was read. The writer in violent terms denounced the system of emigration of pauper children, and asserted that on their arrival there they were placed with poor wretches who could not afford to educate their own children, and who were only too glad to get hold of unfortunate English children to be their abject slaves, to saw wood, and shovel snow; receiving in return dogs' crabs, and dogs' kicks, too. She had been there four years and seen nothing of school, and she expressed her delight at hearing that the Guardians had refused assistance to Miss Rye.

THE WAR NEWS.

TURKEY.

The Philippopolis inhabitants have petitioned the Sultan for an armistice between the belligerents.

The Turkish cavalry have taken possession of fourteen additional abandoned ammunition waggons within the lines previously occupied by the Russians at Plevna.

The Porte has issued a circular declaring that six thousand inoffensive persons of both sexes have been massacred in various villages by the Russians and Bulgarians.

The publication of war news, favourable or unfavourable, has been prohibited at Constantinople.

The Turkish troops have crossed the Montenegrin frontier, with the object of preventing Prince Nicholas besieging Nicsies.

RUSSIA.

The Russians are establishing camps in Roumania to accommodate 200,000 men, and preparing for contingencies during the settlement of the Eastern question.

Rustchuk is completely surrounded. The Russians are now conducting a spirited campaign.

The Russian press is furious in its attacks upon England's "perfidious policy," and predicts serious difficulties.

The officials at the Russian Embassy threateningly declare that England's open support to Turkey would immediately release the Czar from the disinterested promises he made at Livadia, and enable him to dictate his own terms of peace.

Gortschakoff is collecting proofs of the various occurrences at the seat of war which show that England is not acting upon the strict rules of neutrality. The Prince's intention is to reserve them for a fitting opportunity, which he is reported to have said Lord Derby may himself soon supply.

ENGLAND'S ATTITUDE.

English forbearance has a limit, and the Government will not shrink from protecting Constantinople from Russia.

The British Cabinet has decided to reinforce the garrison at Gibraltar and Malta, with three thousand men immediately.

The Times says while it is easy to understand that there should be a panic in Constantinople, there is no excuse for a panic in England. It calls on Russia to punish Cossacks who committed outrages.

Wimbledon.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA CHALLENGE TROPHY.

The Standard in its report of the Wimbledon meeting on the 12th inst., has the following:—

The point of interest, however, is the Dominion of Canada Challenge Trophy, which has excited the admiration of all beholders. It is a splendid work of art, manufactured by Messrs. Elkington & Co., from designs by Mr. Wyon, of Regent street. It is a massive silver shield. In the centre is an emblematic figure of Canada, and round it are grouped in seven sections representation of the seven triumphs of Rome. Forming an outer circle to these groups are the coats of arms of the seven Canadian Provinces set in enamel; and on an outer rim of polished ebony are set the monograms of the seven Provinces of Canada in letters of solid gold. The shield revolves on a concealed pivot, but apparently it is supported on a pedestal about ten inches in height, formed of Canadian maple oak, and pine. The shield is of silver.

"Canker in the Bud."

You watch its development with expectant solicitude—the choice, exquisitely moulded bud which promises to unfold with the perfect flower. You perhaps think how it will adorn the drawing-room vase, and anticipate the pleasures of showing it to your flower-loving friends. But some morning you find its head drooping, its fragrance fled, and an ugly purple spot on one of the delicately-tinted petals. It is the poet's "canker in the bud." How often the loathsome canker blights the cherished "infant blossoms" in our household gardens—those human buds which give earnest of a brilliant future. The noisome canker, so long concealed—scrofula—at length reveals its dreaded presence and to our bright hopes succeeds the most agonizing fear, for we know the fatal sequel it portends—pulmonary consumption. It is estimated by eminent medical authorities that at least one-fifth of mankind are afflicted with this insidious malady. But its ravages are so secret, that even its victims are unaware of its presence until it suddenly discloses itself in some of its myriad and oftentimes fatal forms. A slight cutaneous eruption is often the only indicator of its presence. The only means of exterminating this disease from the system is by a thorough course of constitutional treatment. This treatment must fulfill three indications, namely, promote nutrition, alter or purify the blood, and arrest disorganization of the tissues and the formation of tubercles. No more efficient alternative can be employed for these purposes than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. While imparting strength and tone to the digestive organs it cleanses the blood and heals the diseased tissues. Test its virtues ere the deadly canker has blighted the life you prize.

The Barley Crop.

The Belleville Intelligencer says:—Judging from the samples sent us withing the past few days, the barley crop of this section—the best barley crop in America—will be of the very best quality, and the yield will be excellent and the color of the brightest. One sample in particular, from the farm of Mr. Geo. Anderson, in Ameliasburgh, shows that the grain is very plump, and bright in color, which are the great desiderata in securing a good crop and the highest market price. A great deal of barley has been cut within ten days past, and the general report is very favourable. One matter we would urge upon our farmers, namely, that they must clean their barley thoroughly. Otherwise, an inferior article better cleaned will secure a higher price. We have urged this for years past, but with indifferent effect, and the consequence has been not only a lowering of the price, but the drying away of dealers, who must have a good and clean article. They found the quality here, but the dirty state of the grain, drove them to other parts where they were content to buy a little poorer article at the top price. In justice to themselves, our farmers ought to pay strict attention to this important matter.

The railroad strike causes a general advance here in beef, butter, and Western produce.

LONDON, July 23.—The whale-boat New Bedford, with Capt. Crapo and wife, from New Bedford, Mass., has arrived at Cornwall.

Several of the 12th of July rioters at Charlottetown have been committed for trial in the Supreme Court; others are still under examination.

The crop reports from Nebraska and Western Iowa are most favourable, indicating the large yield of all kinds of grain for years.

The Spanish authorities are preparing to send 25,000 men to Cuba in October to fill gaps caused by disease and death.

CHEYENNE, WY., July 23.—The reduction of wages of the Union Pacific road, ordered on July the 1st, has been rescinded, and the employees are satisfied.

DETROIT, July 23.—The firemen, switchmen, and brakemen on the Canada Southern at Slocum and Detroit Junctions have struck.

The World says Jay Gould at Long Branch yesterday predicted a monarchy, and said he would give a million dollars to see Grant in the White House.

An alarming accident occurred in Weyley, Mass., at the public wedding of a clergyman. It was intended to fire a cannon just as the bridal party left the altar, but owing to some mistake it was not fired until some seventy-five people people had come from the church and were standing in front of it, when the gun exploded with such force that it drove large pieces through the church, and other pieces that weighed fifteen pounds were thrown almost a quarter of a mile. Two persons were injured.

At the Bristol (Eng.) Board of Guardians meeting a letter addressed from Quebec to one of the guardians, from a girl, named Polly McKinnon, was read. The writer in violent terms denounced the system of emigration of pauper children, and asserted that on their arrival there they were placed with poor wretches who could not afford to educate their own children, and who were only too glad to get hold of unfortunate English children to be their abject slaves, to saw wood, and shovel snow, receiving in return dogs' crabs, and dogs' kicks, too. She had been there four years and seen nothing of school, and she expressed her delight at hearing that the Guardians had refused assistance to Miss Rye.

AND KIDNEY TROUBLES. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF EXCORIATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAKE BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa. says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a Crooked RUM, by SIX applications." Another who has had ASTHMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50-cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

It is a Kidney and of Nephritis, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." H. V. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of SIX of the BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. Is as good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. THOMAS is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Take no other." Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts. NORTHROP & LYMAN, Toronto, Ont., Proprietors for the Dominion.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

Increasing the Sale of Cheese.

A recent issue of the Chicago Weekly Times says: "Many grocers in this city affirm that the consumption of cheese is decreasing. It seems certain that it is not increasing anywhere in the country. But for the foreign demand it is plain that the manufacture of cheese would no longer be profitable. It becomes the manufacturers of cheese to carefully consider why the home demand for the product does not increase rather than decrease, and to devise plans for making cheese a more popular article of diet. It is altogether likely that manufacturers of cheese have not sufficiently studied the demands of the home market. They have been content to make for the most part the kind of cheese that is fashionable in England. The cheese average about 60 pounds weight, and are of very nearly uniform flavor and appearance. It is certain that they satisfy the demands of the market in Great Britain, where cheese comes into competition with beef as an article of food. Being regarded as a substantial article of general diet rather than as a table condiment, it is purchased in quite liberal quantities.

In this country, however, cheese is regarded as a condiment rather than an article of food, and accordingly it comes into competition, not with beef, pork and mutton, but with canned fruits, pickles and jellies. It is accordingly purchased in quite small quantities, and a sixty pound cheese cuts to very poor advantage when customers call for slices weighing from one to three pounds. A large surface is left exposed to the vile odors of a grocery every time a slice is taken off. Of course the surface dries, cracks and presents a very unsightly appearance. It does not look well when seen by the side of fine jars and bottles of canned fruits, jellies and pickles. The latter are generally tastefully arranged on shelves, while the former is placed on a board on the far end of the counter and in the immediate proximity to kegs of plug tobacco, barrels of onions, tanks of kerosene oil and boxes of codfish. The cheese being an absorbent of gases, of course has the flavor of all these substances to a greater or less extent. Its positions, surroundings, appearance, and acquired flavors are all against it.

It is a question if smaller cheese would not cut to better advantage and sell more readily. If manufacturers of cheese wish to increase their sales, let them study the demands of the market and endeavor to supply them. This is what the manufacturers of other commodities do, and cheese makers should learn from the experience of others.

Sure Death to the Currant Worm

The destruction of the currant bushes for years past by worms has been the means of enhancing the price of that very valuable fruit in most markets, while with a little care it can be cheaply protected. It is a well known fact that white hellebore is sure death to the currant worm, but at the same time many will not try it, while others apply it in such a way that it is soon washed off by rains, or only touches the top and outside leaves, leaving the inside of the bunch of bushes for the worm to feed upon. The whole secret is to apply it on the under side of the leaves, where the worm fastens to eat. To do this, I take a piece of cotton cloth that the powder will shake through sparingly, about ten inches square; put in about four ounces of the powder, and gather it up around the end of a stick about three feet long and tie it on, making a sort of bag at the end. I then make the application in the morning before the dew is off by opening the bunch of bushes and putting the bag end down nearly to the bottom and shake it, the current of air is then upward, and the leaves being damp, the powder sticks on the under side. If the current of air is then upward, and the leaves being damp,

MERITS OF THE BLAKE PIANO-FORTE

The destruction of the currant bushes for years past by worms has been the means of enhancing the price of that very valuable fruit in most markets, while with a little care it can be cheaply protected. It is a well known fact that white hellebore is sure death to the currant worm, but at the same time many will not try it, while others apply it in such a way that it is soon washed off by rains, or only touches the top and outside leaves, leaving the inside of the bunch of bushes for the worm to feed upon. The whole secret is to apply it on the under side of the leaves, where the worm fastens to eat. To do this, I take a piece of cotton cloth that the powder will shake through sparingly, about ten inches square; put in about four ounces of the powder, and gather it up around the end of a stick about three feet long and tie it on, making a sort of bag at the end. I then make the application in the morning before the dew is off by opening the bunch of bushes and putting the bag end down nearly to the bottom and shake it, the current of air is then upward, and the leaves being damp, the powder sticks on the under side. If the current of air is then upward, and the leaves being damp, the powder sticks to the under side. If the current of air is a little sideways, shake low on the wind side on the outside of the bunch of bushes. It is not best to wait the appearance of the worm, but doctor the bushes as soon as the blossoms are well developed and the leaves are half or two thirds grown, and again after the fruit has fairly set. This will usually do the work for the season. The main point is to rightly apply the hellebore, and with these hints and a careful attention, with the use of a little judgment, the currant bush can be preserved. We have a row about six rods long that we have preserved for over twelve years in fine, healthy condition, producing from $15 to $20 yearly, besides what we use, at a cost of care not to exceed $1 per rod.—[J. W., in New York Tribune.]

A Potato Bug Remedy.

A writer in the Boston Transcript says:—Having made a successful experiment on these pests of our gardens and fields, I give you the facts for the benefit of the interested multitude.

I planted about one hundred hills of potatoes in the garden, thinking they would be as many as I should be able to defend against the invading hosts which I expected would attack them. I watched the young growth closely, and picked off all marauding bugs twice a day for several weeks, examined the leaves hastily every few days and crushed all nests of eggs I could see, and congratulated myself that I was making a very successful fight against these troublesome emigrants from Colorado.

But on the very warm Sunday which we had about three weeks ago, in strolling through my garden, I was surprised to see young bugs by the thousands almost covering every hill of my potatoes. I saw clearly that hand-picking would be a desperate game and of doubtful utility at best. On the Monday morning following, I took a quantity of air-slacked lime, and with a fine sieve sifted it on to the vines while they were wet with dew. There was a light breeze blowing at the time, and by holding my sieve in a favorable position, the lime covered nearly every leaf, above and below, causing the whole to look as though there had been a heavy snow squall. The result was much more favorable than I expected. In fact I have not been able to find more than half a dozen bugs on my potatoes since; and they look as thoroughly demoralized as though they had graduated from some sweat box, or had been reformed nearly to death by some "charitable institution." I have had to apply the lime but once since—soon after a heavy shower—and I defy Massachusetts to show a finer looking lot of potatoes than mine to-day, and not a bug about them! Success consists in using plenty of lime, covering all parts of the vines.

Skeleton Leaves.

Take a tablespoonful of chloride of lime in liquid state, mix with a quart of pure spring water. The leaves must be soaked in this mixture for four hours (more or less, according to the delicacy or coarseness of the leaf structure); then take out and well washed in a large basin filled with water; after which they should be left to dry, with free exposure to light and air. 2. Perhaps the most effectual way is, first to dip the leaves in boiling water, then immerse them in dilute sulphuric acid, containing from ten to twenty per cent of the acid. In a day or two use a pretty stiff bristle brush to the leaves, adding drop by drop, a little saturated solution of bichromate of potassium. When the operation seems complete, wash the leaves carefully in ammoniated water and finish with a little weak hypochlorid of calcium or chlorine water. Bleach thus: One drachm of chloride of lime, mixed in a pint of water and allowed to settle; pour off the clear liquid and put in the leaves; steep them till white, say about ten minutes (if they stay too long they become brittle), wash them in a dish of clean water and dry between sheets of blotting paper.

The preparation of skeleton leaves is a very delicate and wearisome process, and should only be attempted by those happily constituted persons who can keep their patience under failures.—N. Y. Tribune.

On the entrance of a visitor a physician asks him regarding his ailments. His meal is then prescribed, and he is allowed to eat no more than is presented to him. At the close he is dismissed to smoke a medicated cigar and to sip coffee, camomile tea, or whatever other beverage may be considered advisable.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Largely the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known DR. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to persons and places where they are needed as they be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to hold in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

References for further information may be made to the following brethren (and others who may be added) who will act as a Committee for selection and distribution.

Richness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, Drooping of Throat Disappeared.
ST. ANAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

J. B. HARDING.
Sirs—Being desirous that others may know some of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I am glad to inform you what it has done for me. I am 22 years of age, and have been ill for about five years. I employed three or four different doctors, and tried medicines without receiving any permanent benefit. I began rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I came so bad as to be unable to do any honest work at all. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades through the shoulders, very lame back, and a lump in my right lung as though there was a weight in it, with continual drooping in the throat and pain in the lungs, such was my condition when I came to take your Catarrh Remedy. One bottle of which by pains and gave me an improved appetite, and in four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to do hard and continued labor, such as chopping clearing land, at which I have been engaged since. My recovery I attribute solely, with God, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly

LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN

Have recently published a new edition of "Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure of all diseases of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Impediments to Marriage, resulting from excesses." Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or stage stamps. Celebrated author of the admirable Essay, demonstrating from thirty years' experience, that alarming consequences radically cured without the dangerous internal medicine or the application of force; pointing out a mode of cure at once certain and efficient, by means of which, after no matter what indiscretion may have been committed, a man may cure himself cheaply, privately and safely.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Ties and Garters.

BY BARRY GRAY.

I BOUGHT a box of ties, one day—
Silken ties, of various hues—
And on my dressing-case they lay
Convenient for my daily use.

In summer-time I like to wear
Around my neck a narrow band
It gives me quite a youthful air—
If fastened by my lady's hand.

One morn, while looking o'er my
In search of a peculiar shade,
I found, somewhat to my surprise,
That two were stolen, or mislaid.

"Perhaps," I thought, "my lady's
Has taken them to give her beau
And so, when she was nigh, I said
"I wonder where my neck-ties lie!"

She took the hint, and tossed her
"I haven't them;" and then she said
Her feather duster, while she said
"Nearer at home you'd better lie!"

Then blushing, laughing, tripped
And left me in a thoughtful mood
But what she meant I could not see
Nor whether it were ill or good.

But ere I passed my lady's door,
I paused, tapped, entered, and—
Then saw upon the chamber floor
The dainty ties that I had missed!

Beside a pair of brodered hose,
In sweet disorder did they lay,
Fresh and unsullied as a rose—
Both hose and ties of pearly gray.

So what I wear around my throat
My wife wears round the—limb
We both on ties and garters dote:
But Honi soit qui mal y pense!

Ties and Garters.

BY BARRY GRAY.

I BOUGHT a box of ties, one day—
Silken ties, of various hues—
And on my dressing-case they lay,
Convenient for my daily use.

In summer-time I like to wear
Around my neck a narrow band;
It gives me quite a youthful air—
If fastened by my lady's hand.

One morn, while looking o'er my ties
In search of a peculiar shade,
I found, somewhat to my surprise,
That two were stolen, or mislaid.

"Perhaps," I thought, "my lady's maid
In search of a peculiar shade,
I found, somewhat to my surprise,
That two were stolen, or mislaid."

She took the hint, and tossed her head;
"I haven't them," and then she shook
Her feather duster, while she said,
"Nearer at home you'd better look."

Then blushing, laughing, tripped away,
And left me in a thoughtful mood;
But what she meant I could not say,
Nor whether it were ill or good.

But ere I passed my lady's door,
I paused, tapped, entered, and—we kissed;
Then saw upon the chamber floor
The dainty ties that I had missed.

Beside a pair of 'brodered hose,
In sweet disorder did they lay,
Fresh and unsullied as a rose—
Both hose and ties of pearly gray.

So what I wear around my throat
My wife wears round the limb that dance
We both on ties and garters do:
But Honi soit qui mal y pense!

THOMPSON HALL.

A VERY FUNNY STORY.

BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

CHAPTER V.

MRS. BROWN'S EXPLANATION.

"This has been a very disagreeable accident, Mr. Jones," said the husband of the lady.

"Accident! I don't know how it could have been an accident. It has been a most—most—most—monstrous—er—er—I must say, interference with a gentleman's privacy and personal comfort."

"Quite so, Mr. Jones, but—on the part of the lady who is my wife—"

"So I understand. I myself am about to become a married man, and I can understand what your feelings must be. I wish to say as little as possible to harrow them." Here Mr. Brown bowed. "But—there's the fact. She did do it."

"She thought it was—me!"

"What!"

"I give you my words as a gentleman, Mr. Jones. When she was putting that mess upon you, she thought it was me! She did indeed."

Mr. Jones looked at his new acquaintance and shook his head. He did not think it possible that any woman could make such a mistake as that.

that the lady, with her husband, was to be allowed to leave Paris by the night train. The nature of the accident probably became known to all. Mr. Brown was interrogated by many, and though he professed to declare he would answer no question, nevertheless he found it better to tell the clerk something of the truth than to allow the matter to be hounded in mystery. It is to be feared that Mr. Jones, who did not once show himself through the day, but who employed the hours in endeavouring to assuage the injury done him, still lived in the conviction that the lady had played a practical joke on him. But the subject of such a joke never talks about it, and Mr. Jones could not be induced to speak even by the friendly adherence of the night-porter.

Mrs. Brown also clung to the seclusion of her own bedroom, never once stirring from it till the time came in which she was to be taken down to the omnibus. Up stairs she ate her meals, and up stairs she passed her time in packing and unpacking, and in requesting that telegrams might be sent repeatedly to Thompson Hall. In the course of the day two such telegrams were sent, in the latter of which the Thompson family were assured that the Browns would arrive probably in time for breakfast on Christmas-day, certainly in time for church. She asked more than once tenderly after Mr. Jones' welfare, but could obtain no information. "He was very cross, and that's all I know about it," said Mr. Brown. Then she made a remark to the gentleman's Christian name, which appeared on the card as "Barnaby." My sister's husband's name will be Barnaby," she said. And this man's Christian name is Barnaby; that's all the difference," said her husband, with ill timed jocularity.

We all know how people under a cloud are apt to fail in ascertaining their personal dignity. On the former day a separate vehicle had been ordered by Mr. Brown to take himself and his wife to the station, but now, after his misfortunes, he contents himself with such provisions as the people at the hotel might make for him. At the appointed hour he brought his wife down, thickly veiled. There were many strangers, as she passed through the hall, ready to look at the lady who had done that wonderful thing in the dead of night but none could see a feature of her face as she stepped across the hall and was hurried into the omnibus. And there were many eyes also on Mr. Jones, who followed her very quickly for he also, in spite of his sufferings, was leaving Paris in the evening in order that he might be with his English friends on Christmas-day. He, as he went through the crowd, assumed an air of great dignity, to which, perhaps, something was added by his endeavors as he walked to save his poor throat from irritation. He, too, got into the same omnibus, stumbling over the feet of his enemy in the dark. At the station they got their tickets, one close after the other, and then were brought into each other's presence in the waiting-room. I think it must be acknowledged that here Mr.

"Mr. Jones!" exclaimed the husband. "Why ask for Mr. Jones?" demanded the wife. The servant was about to tender some explanation, when Mr. Jones stepped up and said that he was Mr. Jones. "We are going to Thompson Hall," said the lady with great vigor.

"So am I," said Mr. Jones, with much dignity. It was, however, arranged that he should sit with the coachman, as there was a rumble behind for the other servant. The luggage was put into a cart, and away all went for Thompson Hall.

"What do you think about it, Mary?" whispered Mr. Brown, after a pause. He was evidently awe-struck by the height of the occasion.

"I can not make it out all. What do you think?"

"I don't know what to think. Jones is going to Thompson Hall!"

He's a very good-looking young man," said Mrs. Brown.

Well—that's as people think. A thin stuck-up fellow, I should say. Up to this moment he has never forgiven you for what you did to him."

"Would you have forgiven his sister, Charles, if she'd done to you?"

"He hasn't got a wife—yet."

"How do you know?"

"He is coming home now," said Mrs. Brown. "He expects to meet the young lady this very day, or to-day. He told me so. That is, he said at the reasons why he was so merry, and being stopped by what you had said at night."

"I suppose he knows. I don't think he wouldn't be going to the Hall," said Mrs. Brown.

"I can't make it out," said Mr. Brown, shaking his head.

"He looks quite like a Frenchman," said Mrs. Brown, "though he is not so still. Jones! Barnaby Jones!"

"Sure it was Barnaby?"

"That was the name of the man."

"Not Barnaby?" asked Mr. Brown.

"It was Barnaby Jones, and the name is just the same as 'Barnaby' that you saw as for looking like a Frenchman, he has no means quite so sure. A Frenchman takes an apology when it is offered."

"Perhaps, my dear, that is the condition of his throat. He has had a mustard plaster on it, and he might not have liked it. But he was at Thompson Hall at last."

A VERY FUNNY STORY.
BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.
CHAPTER V.

MRS. BROWN'S EXPLANATION.

"This has been a very disagreeable accident, Mr. Jones," said the husband of the lady.

"Accident! I don't know how it could have been an accident. It has been a most—most—most—am monstrous—er—er
—I must say, interference with a gentleman's privacy and personal comfort."

"Quite so, Mr. Jones, but—on the part of the lady who is my wife—"

"So I understand. I myself am about to become a married man, and I can understand what your feelings must be. I wish to say as little as possible to harrow them." Here Mr. Brown bowed. "But—there's the fact. She did do it."

"She thought it was—me!"

"What!"

"I give you my words as a gentleman,
Mr. Jones. When she was putting that mess upon you, she thought it was me!
She did indeed."

Mr. Jones looked at his new acquaintance and shook his head. He did not think it possible that any woman could make such a mistake as that.

"I had a very bad sore throat," continued Mr. Brown, "and indeed you may perceive it still"—in saying this he perhaps aggravated a little the sign of his distemper—"and I asked Mrs. Brown to go down and get one—just what she put on you."

"I wish you'd had it," said Mr. Jones, putting his hand up to his neck.

"I wish I had, for your sake as well as mine, and for hers poor woman. I don't know when she will get over the shock."

"I don't know when I shall."

And it has stopped me on my journey. I was to have been to-night, this very night, this Christmas eve, with the young lady I am engaged to marry. Of course I couldn't travel. The extent of the injury done nobody can imagine at present."

"It has been just as bad to me, Sir. We were to have been with our family this Christmas eve. There were particular reasons—most particular. We were only hindered from going by hearing of your condition."

"333—that's yours; 333—that's ours.
Don't you see how easy it was? She had lost her way, and she was a little afraid
lest the things should fall down."

"I wish it had, with all my heart."

"That's how it was. Now I'm sure,
Mr. Jones, you'll take a lady's apology.
It was a most unfortunate mistake—
most unfortunate; but what more can be said?"

Mr. Jones gave himself up to reflection for a few moments before he replied to this. He supposed that he was bound to believe the story as far as it went. At any rate, he did not know how he could say that he did not believe it. It seemed to him to be almost incredible, especially incredible in regard to that personal mistake, for, except that they both had long beards and brown beards, Mr. Jones thought that there was no point of resemblance between himself and Mr.
Brown. But still, even that, he felt,
must be accepted. But then why had he been left, deserted, to undergo all those torments? "She found out her mistake
at last, I suppose?" he said.

"Oh yes."

"Why didn't she wake a fellow and take it off again?"

"Ah."

"She can't have cared very much for a man's comfort, when she went away
and left him like that."

"Ah! there was the difficulty, Mr.
Jones."

"Difficulty! Who was it that had done it? To come to me in my bedroom in the middle of the night and put that thing on me, and then leave it there and say nothing about it! It seem to me deuced like a practical joke."

"No Mr. Jones."

"That's the way I look at it," said Mr.
Jones, plucking up his courage.

Christian name, which appeared on the card as "Barnaby." My sister's husband's name will be Barnaby," she said.
And this man's Christian name is Barnaby; that's all the difference," said her husband, with ill timed jocularity.

We all know how people under a cloud are apt to fail in ascertaining their personal dignity. On the former day a separate yeliele had been ordered by Mr.
Brown to take himself and his wife to the station, but now, after his misfortunes, he contents himself with such provisions as the people at the hotel might make for him. At the appointed hour he brought his wife down, thickly veiled. There were many strangers, as she passed through the hall, ready to look at the lady who had done that wonderful thing
in the dead of night but none could see a feature of her face as she stepped across the hall and was hurried into the omnibus. And there were many eyes also on Mr. Jones, who followed her very quickly for he also, in spite of his sufferings, was leaving Paris in the evening in order that he might be with his English friends on Christmas-day. He, as he went through the crowd, assumed an air of great dignity, to which, perhaps, something was added by his endeavors as he walked to save his poor throat from irritation. He, too, got into the same omnibus, stumbling over the feet of his enemy in the dark. At the station they got their tickets, one close after the other, and then were brought into each other's presence in the waiting-room. I think it must be acknowledged that here Mr.
Jones was conscious not only of her presence, but of her unconsciousness of his presence and that he assumed an attitude as though he should have said,
"Now do you think it possible for me to believe that you mistook me for your husband?" She was perfectly quiet, but sat through the quarter of an hour with her face continually veiled. Mr. Brown made some little overture of conversation to Mr. Jones, but Mr. Jones, though he did mutter some reply, showed plainly enough that he had no desire for further intercourse. Then came the accustomed
stampede, the awful rush, the internecine struggle in which seats had to be found. Seats, I fancy, are regularly
found, even by the most tardy, but it
always appears that every British father
and every British husband is actuated at these stormy moments by a conviction that unless he proves himself a very Hercules he and his daughters and his wife will be left desolate in Paris. Mr.
Brown was quite Herculean, carrying a hat-box in his own hands, besides the cloaks, the coats, the rugs, the sticks, and the umbrellas. But when he had got himself and his wife well seated, with their faces to the engine, with the corner seat for her—there was Mr. Jones immediately opposite to her, Mr. Jones, as soon as he perceived the inconvenience of his position, made a scramble for another place, but was too late. In that con-tinguity the journey as far as Calais had to be made. She, poor woman, never once took up her veil. There he sat without closing an eye, stiff as a ramrod,
sometimes showing by little uneasy gestures that the trouble at his neck was still there, but never speaking a word,
and hardly moving a limb.

Crossing from Calais to Dover the lady
was of course separated from her victim.
The passage was very bad, and she more
than once reminded her husband how
well it would have been with them now
had they pursued their journey as she
had intended—as though they had been detained in Paris by his fault! Mr. Jones as he laid himself down on his back, gave himself up to wondering whether any man before him had ever been made subject to such absolute injustice. Now and again he put his hand up to his own beard, and began to doubt whether it could have been moved, without waking
him. What if chloroform had been used? Many such suspicions crossed his mind during the misery of that passage.

They were again together in the same
railway carriage from Dover to London.
They had now got used to the close neighborhood, and knew how to endure each
the presence of the other. But as yet

he wouldn't be going to the Hall," said
Mrs. Brown.

"I can't make it out," said Mr. Brown, shaking his head.

"He looks quite like a gentleman," said Mrs. Brown, "though he has been a while still. Jones! Barnaby Jones! You are sure it was Barnaby?"

"That was the name on the card," said
Mrs. Brown.

"Not Barnaby?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"It was Barnaby Jones on the card," said Mrs. Brown, "just the same as 'Barnaby Rudge,' and as for looking like a gentleman, I don't mean quite so sure. A gentleman takes an apology when it's offered."

"Perhaps, my dear, that depends on the condition of his throat. If you had had a mustard plaster on all night, you might not have liked it. But here was at Thompson Hall at last."

Captain Crapo's Voyage.

A MAN AND WIFE CROSS THE OCEAN IN A TWENTY-FOOT BOAT.

The boat New Bedford, after a voyage
of forty-nine days, arrived at Montreal Bay, Penzance, England last night. This tiny craft is a schooner-rigged, 20-foot boat, twenty feet long. Her entire crew consists of Mr. Thos. Crapo and his wife. On the 7th inst., when thirty-three days out,
she was spoken by the British mail ship,
pany's steamship Denmark, which found her
all well, and supplied the little sailer with provisions, brandy and rum, and Jens of water. The fourteen remaining days of the voyage have been most ashi-
ous. Crapo and his wife were quite exhausted on their arrival in port. For the three days previous the women had been unable to help her husband, and as left hand had become useless owing to its protracted employment in steering.
During fifteen days the New Bedford was hove to in the worst of three gales
that were encountered. The admi-
ous couple lost their reserve of food overboard.

The voyage was commenced on May 23, when the vessel left New Bedford,
but by stress of weather she had to put
into Chatham, Mass., where she lay
until the 2nd of June, when she were again hoisted and the New Bedford

"There isn't a woman in all England or in all France less likely to do such a thing than my wife. She's as steady as a rock, Mr. Jones, and would no more go into another gentleman's bedroom in joke than—Oh dear no! You're going to be a married man yourself."

"Unless all this makes a difference," said Mr. Jones, almost in tears. "I had sworn that I would be with her this Christmas eve."

"Oh, Mr. Jones, I can not believe that will interfere with your happiness. How could you think that your wife, as is to be, would do such a thing as that in a joke?"

"She wouldn't do it at all, joke or any way."

"How can you tell what accidents
might happen to any one?"

"She'd have wakened the man, then afterward. I'm sure she would. She would never have left him to suffer in that way. Her heart is too soft. Why didn't she send you to wake me and explain it all? That's what my Jane would have done; and I should have gone and wakened him. But the whole thing is impossible," he said, shaking his head as he remembered that he and his Jane were not in a condition as yet to undergo any such mutual trouble. At last Mr. Jones was brought to acknowledge that nothing more could be done. The lady had sent her apology and told her story, and he must bear the trouble and inconvenience to which she had subjected him. He still however, had his own opinion about her conduct generally, and could not be brought to give any signs of amity. He simply bowed when Mr. Brown was hoping to induce him to shake hands, and sent no word of pardon to the great offender.

The matter, however, was so far concluded that there was no further question of police interference, nor any doubt but

enough that he had no desire for further
intercourse. Then came the accustomed
stampede, the awful rush, the interior
struggle in which seats had to be found. Seats, I fancy, are regularly
found, even by the most tardy, but it
always appears that every British father

Crossing from Calais to Dover the lady
was of course separated from her victim.
The passage was very bad, and she more
than once reminded her husband how
well it would have been with them now
had they pursued their journey as she
had intended—as though they had been

man before him had ever been made subject to such absolute injustice. Now and

could have been moved, without waking

mind during the misery of that passage.

They were again together in the same
railway carriage from Dover to London.
They had now got used to the close neighborhood, and knew how to endure each
the presence of the other. But as yet
Mr. Jones had never seen the lady's face.
He longed to know what were the features of the woman who had been so blind—it indeed that story was true. Or if it were not true, of what like was the woman who would dare in the middle of the night to play such a trick as that. But still she kept her veil close over her face.

From Cannon street the Browns took their departure in a cab for the Liverpool Street Station, whence they would be conveyed by the Eastern Counties Railway to Stratford. Now, at any rate, their troubles were over. They would be in ample time not only for Christmas day church, but for Christmas breakfast-fast. "It will be just the same as getting in there last night," said Mr. Brown, as he walked across the platform to place
his wife in the carriage for Stratford.
She entered it the first, and as she did so there she saw Mr. Jones seated in the corner! Hitherto she had borne his presence well, but now she could not restrain herself from a little start and a little scream. He bowed his head very slightly as though acknowledging the compliment, and then down she dropped her veil. When they arrived at Stratford, the journey being over in a quarter of an hour, Jones was out of the carriage
even before the Browns.

"There is Uncle John's carriage," said Mrs. Brown, thinking that now, at any rate, she would be able to free herself
from the presence of this terrible stranger.
No doubt he was a handsome man to look at, but on no face so sternly hostile
had she never before fixed her eyes.
She did not, perhaps, reflect that the owner if no other face had ever been so deeply injured by herself.

"Please, Sir, we were to ask for Mr.
Jones," said the servant, putting his head
in the carriage after both Mr. and Mrs.
Brown had seated themselves.

The voyage was commenced on May 23, when the vessel left New Bedford,
but by stress of weather she had to put
into Chatham, Mass., where she lay
until the 2nd of June, when the fog
was again hoisted and the New Bedford left on her perilous voyage, with a strong wind. All went well for the first three days, the wind being with her and the sea calm. The wind then changed to south-east and it came on foggy days,
and continued foggy up to the time
they reached the Banks, seven or eight days out. Here a most fortunate thing happened for the passengers and the crew,
which they brought with them, and which
to be of little use, because it was too late to be of use. Whilst on the Banks they saw a boat in which, luckily, they were able to secure. Captain Crapo knocked on the iron hoops and with some exertion made
a new drogue, which answered admirably.
When it is considered that at one point
of the voyage they were obliged to float
nearly three days in a great body of water
it will need no effort to imagine what a fortunate acquisition the new drogue was.
After leaving the Banks, where they lay-to in a gale for fifteen hours, the weather improved and they sailed on till the 21st of June, when another gale was encountered. While lay-to in the New Bedford spoke the steamer Batavia, from which assistance was offered and the opportunity given to be taken for a boat, which was declined. After the weather
they encountered a succession of gales,
the only wonder being that they were able to tell the story. During the voyage which lasted forty nine days, the Batavia
broke, but happily there was no one on board, which was a great relief, and could be repaired. The sea was running very high, and during all the time the passengers lay down to rest they had to wear clothes, everything being water. At one time the captain was for several hours steering without relief, the wheel being so frightful and at another he was several hours consecutively attending to the drogue. Captain Crapo says he could have stood another fifteen days, but he had not sleep for several days, and he landed. His average run was about whilst coming across was made in hours a day.

One of the many extraordinary things connected with the voyage is that it had to be run by dead reckoning, as the New Bedford was not big enough to carry a chronometer. Only one of the passengers could get their bearings, and when speaking the two vessels, Captain Crapo had intended to make for Fairport, but the wind was against it, and the vessel
did not bear on account of a heavy fog.
The crew for Gravesend, and the vessel
ed about mid-night, and the passengers came ashore and received the vessel from tion to be expected from Captain Crapo.
The house they stopped at was a small
by persons eager to shake hands with brave a couple. The boat was a small ed by numbers. Captain Crapo was of going on to Falmouth, and then on to London and the Paris Exhibition.

A correspondent, who signs himself
"A Briton," writes to us to say that that if Mrs. Crapo, who accompanied her husband, and who during the last three days of the voyage was so ill, and was able to render any assistance, had not British waters, Mr. Crapo would have been morally guilty of manslaughter.
He trusts that Crapo will not be able
much of in this country, having exposed
a woman to such thoughtless hardships
and suffering.—From the London Standard

"Mr. Jones!" exclaimed the husband. "Why ask for Mr. Jones?" demanded the wife. The servant was about to tender some explanation, when Mrs. Jones stepped up and said that he was Mr. Jones. "We are going to Thompson Hall," said the lady with great vigor. "So am I," said Mr. Jones, with much dignity. It was, however, arranged that he should sit with the coachman, as there was a rumble behind for the other servant. The luggage was put into a cart, and away all went for Thompson Hall. "What do you think about it, Mary?" whispered Mr. Brown, after a pause. He was evidently awe-struck by the horror of the occasion. "I can not make it out at all. What do you think?"

"I don't know what to think. Jones going to Thompson Hall?"

"He's a very good-looking young man," said Mrs. Brown.

"Well—that's as people think. A stiff stuck-up fellow, I should say. Up to this moment he has never forgiven you for what you did to him."

"Would you have forgiven his wife, Charles, if she'd done to you?"

"He hasn't got a wife—yet."

"How do you know?"

"He is coming home now to be married," said Mr. Brown. "He expects to meet the young lady this very Christmas-day. He told me so. That was one of the reasons why he was so angry at being stopped by what you did last night."

"I suppose he knows Uncle John, or he wouldn't be going to the Hall," said Mrs. Brown.

"I can't make it out," said Mr. Brown, shaking his head.

"He looks quite like a gentleman," said Mrs. Brown, "though he has been a stiff. Jones! Barnaby Jones! I really sure it was Barnaby!"

"That was the name on the card."

"Not Barnaby?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"It was Barnaby Jones on the card, just the same as 'Barnaby Rudge' and as for looking like a gentleman, I think no means quit so stiff. A woman takes an apology when it's offered."

"Perhaps, my dear, that depends on the condition of his throat. If you had had a mustard plaster on all night, you might not have liked it. But he was at Thompson Hall at last."

A MAN AND WIFE CROSS THE ATLANTIC IN TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.

High Etiquette.

If fine manners are naturally associated with rank, the supposition would be that the higher the rank, the finer the manners. It would then follow that the guest of honor, who was also the stranger, would take precedence of all others. It is therefore bewildering to learn that when the Prince of Wales recently gave a dinner to General Grant, the distinguished guest brought up the rear of the procession to the dining-room. We are but boys in etiquette; yet if the Prince of Wales had been the guest of honor of the President of the United States, he would not have been permitted to close the march to dinner; and he would have preceded not as prince, but as guest; for it would be equally true of untitled Mr. Bright or Mr. Gladstone as of a prince.

Courtesy is a poor thing if it can not dispense, upon due occasion, with the rigidity of ceremonial forms. It is rumored that the American minister in England was long absorbed in the task of arranging General Grant's invitations, so that he should not be apparently insulted by being treated at entertainments given in his honor with less consideration than any other guest. This is hardly credible to an uneducated American, because he can not comprehend either that an English gentleman should offer or an American gentleman accept such a situation. The rules of really good society, whether titled or untitled, are every where the same in regard to certain essential points, and it is a pity if they are relaxed in the house of a prince. To invite an untitled man into a titled company upon an occasion of pure ceremony where titles determine precedence, is to invite him to go behind. If a prince gives a dinner in honor of an untitled man, he is bound to honor him chiefly, and he invites the company merely to do him honor.

If, therefore, it be true that the Prince of Wales gave a dinner especially to General Grant, and permitted the greater part of the company to precede him to the table, it is a gross error should have quietly left the prince, and all the more if, as is commonly held, all etiquette and forms are relaxed in the European society. For if we admit the significance of the situation, that an American without a title is a social nullity, however honored, and the special guest of the prince, he is not to be recognized as the guest of honor.

Probably, if the prince, General Grant, was not so much troubled; but if English etiquette is required by etiquette to be given, and if a discount, they are to be pitied. Editor's Easy Paper's Magazine for Sep-

In Church—During the Litany.

I'm glad we got here early, Nell; We're not obliged to sit to-day Beside those horrid Smith girls—well I'm glad they go so soon away— How does this cushion match this dress? I think it looks quite charmingly. Bowed sweetly to the Smiths? Oh! yes— (Responds)... From pride, vanity, hypocrisy. Good Lord, deliver us.

I hate these naughty Courtneys, I'm sure they needn't sit to me Above us all—for mama says Their dresses aren't as nice as mine. And one's engaged; so just for fun, To make her jealous—try to win Her lover—show her how it's done— (Responds)... From hatred, envy, mischief, sin. Good Lord, deliver us.

To-day the rector is to preach In aid of missionary work; He'll say he hopes and trusts that each Will nobly give, nor duty shirk. I hate to give. But then one must, You know we have a forward seat; People can see—they will, I trust— (Responds)... From want of charity, deceit, Good Lord, deliver us.

Did you know Mr. Gray had gone? That handsome Mr. Rogers too? Dear me! We shall be quite forlorn If all the men leave—and so few! I trust that we, with Cupid's darts, May capture some of them before— (Responds)... Behold the sorrows of our hearts, And, Lord, with mercy, have our prayer.

A Rich Man and his Wife at School.

A lady engaged in teaching the rudimental branches to wealthy people of neglected education in New York has been giving some of her experiences in a series of articles in the New York Telegram. Among others taught by her was a wealthy couple, of whom the writer says:

But of all the classes of neglected education which were brought within the range of my personal experience, perhaps the most interesting to me, and the most touching, was that of a nice and matronly woman who appeared in my rooms one day literally blazing with diamonds, with a fifty dollar bonnet on her head, and a twenty hundred dollar camel's hair shawl on her ample shoulders. Though thus overloaded with ornament, the woman was not really vulgar, and after she had talked to me a while I really liked her. She made a confidant of me at once; she told me her simple history and her strange position. Fourteen years before she had been a chambermaid and her husband a private coachman, both in the service of the same family; they had married, and her husband had taken to his old trade as carpenter, and from a carpenter he became a builder, and from a builder to a millionaire. He was now the fortunate owner of one of the finest houses on Avenue in New York, and his sons and daughters were being educated at the best schools in the country. But up to this date he had enjoyed no spare time to acquire any knowledge save what was absolutely necessary to his business, while his wife had remained as ignorant as at first. Now the loving and worthy couple began without any false pride to procure it. Without further ado, without the slightest pretence at reserve or mystery, the worthy couple invited me to call that very evening.—There I met in a private parlor two people waiting for me, and only two—the wealthy builder and his wife. I found him as frank and as hearty as I found her, and before the evening closed I had given my joint pupils their first lessons. They were docile as babes, and there was something dramatic in the contrast between their wealth and their ignorance, and something pathetic in the humility with which those successful worldlings received instructions. They studied as though they were in a country schoolhouse under the eye of a village pedagogue. I taught them English grammar principally, I also corrected their pronunciation, and, I trust, improved their spelling and their penmanship. Above all, I flattered myself that I won their friendship, for I found them friends worth having.

Captain Crapo's Voyage.

A MAN AND WIFE CROSS THE OCEAN IN A TWENTY-FOOT BOAT.

The boat New Bedford, after a voyage of forty-nine days, arrived in Mount's Bay, Penzance, England last night. This tiny craft is a schooner-rigged life-boat, twenty feet long. Her entire crew consists of Mr. Thos. Crapo and his wife. On the 7th inst., when thirty-five days out, she was spoken by the National Company's steamship Denmark, which found all well, and supplied the little sailer with provisions, brandy and twenty gallons of water. The fourteen remaining days of the voyage have been most arduous. Crapo and his wife were quite exhausted on their arrival in port. For the three days previous the woman had been unable to help her husband, and his left hand had become useless owing to its protracted employment in steering. During fifteen days the New Bedford was hoisted in the worst of three gales that were encountered. The adventurous couple lost their reserve of clothing overboard.

The voyage was commenced on May 23, when the vessel left New Bedford, but by stress of weather she had to put into Chatham, Mass., where she stayed until the 2nd of June, when the sails were again hoisted and the New Bedford left on her perilous voyage, with a fair wind. All went well for the first three days, the wind being south west and the sea calm. The wind then changed to south-east and it came on foggy for four days and continued foggy up to the time they reached the Banks, seven or eight days out. Here a most fortunate thing happened for the navigators. The drogue, which they brought with them was found to be of little use, because it was too light. Whilst off the Banks they saw a key boat in by which, luckily, they were able to secure. Captain Crapo knocked off the iron hoops and with some canvas made a new drogue, which answered admirably. When it is considered that at one part of the voyage they were obliged to lie to for nearly three days in a great gale of wind it will need no effort to imagine what a fortunate acquisition the new drogue was.

After leaving the Banks, where they lay-to in a gale for fifteen hours, the weather improved and they sailed on till the 21st of June, when another gale was encountered. While laying-to, the New Bedford spoke the steamer Batavia, from which assistance was offered and the opportunity given to be taken on board, which was declined. After this incident they encountered a succession of gales, the only wonder being that they survived to tell the story. During the voyage, which lasted forty-nine days, the rigging broke, but happily there was a spare one on board, which was used until the first could be repaired. The sea was running very high, and during all the time the crew lay down to rest they had to lie in wet clothes, everything being wet. At one time the captain was for severely beating the steering wheel, the weather being so frightful and at another he was eighteen hours consecutively attending to the drogue. Captain Crapo says he could not have stood another fifteen days, indeed he had not slept for seventy hours when he landed. His average amount of sleep whilst coming across was under four hours a day.

If, therefore, it be true that the Prince of Wales gave a dinner especially to General Grant, and permitted the greater part of the company to precede him to the table, General Grant should have quietly left the house, and all the more if, as is constantly said, etiquette and forms are real things to European society. For if that be so, the significance of the situation was that an American without a title, however illustrious, however honored at home, and the special guest of the occasion, is not to be recognized as the equal of titled people. Probably, if the story be true, General Grant was not troubled; but if English gentlemen are required by etiquette to acquiesce in so flagrant a discourtesy, they are greatly to be pitied. Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for September.

United States Bonded Warehouses.

Nowhere in New York is there more poetry lodged than in these old warehouses. Their depths are a perpetual neither world of gloom, and the twilight reveals at first only rows of Cyclopean pillars, or huge piles suggesting the altars of Egypt and their sarcophagi. Cross the threshold and climb the stairways from one low-roofed loft to another, and you wander among foreign fields and breathe the air of every zone. Here are tier upon tier of hogheads of sugar, perspiring molasses with the memory of the Cuban sun, and other hogheads of old rum from Jamaica, beneath which the ground is greedily drinking precious ounces. Rows of dusty white barrels of China clay stand alongside rows of barrels of plumage from Ceylon, whose black dust makes the floor about as slippery as a glacier. Quadrangular piles of hides from Calcutta, the Cape of Good Hope, and Buenos Ayres; redoubts of square, gunny-covered boxes of lac gums from India, and kauri gum from Auckland; huge heaps of "allspice" pepper from Jamaica, and fiery bird-pepper and cloves grown in Zanzibar, in which the heat of these torrid latitudes seem concentrate; tall stacks of bags hold the gummy cutch of the West Indies, and beside them are high-heated packages of sticky dates from Arabia, and of Turkish prunes; but you may wipe your fingers on the sleek matting bags of linseed sent all the way from Bombay for your convenience. Go up stairs now, and look at the bales and casks stored to the roof-tree. Cocaine and opium from Cochin China and the old "where every prospect pleases" to make soap for a generation. In this corner are cords and cords of ebony; in that corner other cords of logwood. One is brought from Madagascar to make into drugsticks, the other from the Amazon to mingle with our whiskey, or to be ground up and re-exported to the wine districts of Spain and France. Then the bales—yarn twisted from the beard of coral-bush ripened on the Malabar coast; jute and jute stubs from India; Manila hemp from the Philippines; rags from London; cotton from all over the world.

Upon these warehouse floors is written a history of ope commerce. They are dotted by contact with freight from all the continents, and strewn with samples of the products of every climate. Sea and coffee and cinnamon, fragrant oils and cloves and allspice, mingle their pungent perfumes in the laden air; and indigo, saffron, cochineal, and the sweepings of costly bales dye the floors with a queer cosmopolitan mosaic of colors. As you step out into the broad sunshine, and the heavy iron doors close behind you, you think, though you were just landing after years of foreign travel, and you bear about with you for many hours the aroma of the tropics. — ERNEST INGERSOLL, in Harper's Magazine for September.

Revival Hymns.

The London (Methodist) Watchman, says it fears that the hymns and tunes which are becoming most popular are creeping up from the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting, for which they were originally designed, into the pulpit worship of the Sabbath day. They are displacing the hymns and tunes formed to express the more serious and profound and majestic emotions of the soul. Many of the hymns are silly, and many of the tunes are too much like jigs, but half reformed. These popular religious songs, says the Watchman, may be well enough in their proper place, but that place is not the Sabbath service. "Let there be some part of our religious meetings where the soul may be helped by genuine poetry, and by music of such depth and grayness as its more sober and thoughtful mood demand. There are occasions when life seems so great and eternity so overwhelming, that only the organ can interpret our feelings and help us to offer them to God an acceptable sacrifice. The fiddle, and all jingles of the same class, are impertinence. If our taste is not at fault, the Sabbath service, especially the morning service, is an occasion of this sort; and it is but seldom that hymns and tunes most popular in the Sunday-school and the social meeting, can be brought into it without producing discord in most of the souls present."

Information Wanted.

"John," said Mrs. Sanscript to her husband, one evening last week, "I've been reading the paper." "That's nothing," granted John. "I've seen people before who read newspapers." "Yes; but there are several things in the paper I can't understand." "Then don't read 'em." "Now, here's a column headed 'Base Ball.' What is base ball, John?" "Don't you know what base ball is? Happy, happy woman, you have not lived in vain." "Here it says that 'The Hartfords could not collar Cummings' curves.' What under the sun are Cummings' curves?" "It's the way he delivers the ball." "Is the ball chained?" "No, you booby." "Then how does he deliver it?" "I mean pitched it."

on Cannon street the Browns took departure in a cab for the Tiverton Street Station, whence they would be conveyed by the Eastern Counties' train to Stratford. Now, at any rate, troubles were over. They would have ample time not only for Christmas shopping, but for Christmas day breakfast.

"It will be just the same as getting over last night," said Mr. Brown, as walked across the platform to place himself in the carriage for Stratford. He entered it the first, and as she did so she saw Mr. Jones seated in the next. Hitherto she had borne his rudeness well, but now she could not restrain herself from a little start and a scream. He bowed his head very low as though acknowledging the salutation, and then down she dropped again. When they arrived at Stratford the journey being over in a quarter of an hour, Jones was out of the carriage before the Browns.

"Here is Uncle John's carriage," said Mr. Brown, thinking that now, at any rate, she would be able to free herself from the presence of this terrible stranger. But he was a handsome man to look at, but on no face so sternly hostile as he never before fixed her eyes. He did not, perhaps, reflect that the face of no other face had ever been so injured by herself.

"Leave, Sir, we were to ask for Mr. Jones," said the servant, putting his head into the carriage after both Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and seated themselves.

A marine belonging to the "Bellerophon," who was accidentally killed on board, was buried at Quebec with military honors. A firing party of sailors preceded the body, which was placed in a gun carriage, and draped with the Union Jack. Horses were dispatched with the sailors dragging the carriage to the cemetery with hand lines. The splendid band of the ship accompanied,

"Composure yourself, old woman. You are treading on dangerous grounds ; you are on slippery rocks, while raging billows roll beneath."

"Mercy on me ! What do you mean ?"

"I mean, my dear madam, that whenever a woman begins to pry about among three strikes, fair balls, base hits, daisy-cutters, home runs and kindred subjects, she is in danger of being lost."

"Well, I confess I'm completely lost to know what this newspaper means when it says Addy stole a base, while the spectators applauded. Have we come to such a pass that society will applaud a theft ? Why wasn't Addy arrested ? Now here's Manning put out by Starr, assisted by Carey, and I can't say that he did anything wrong, either. Jemima Christopher ! Here it says that Pike flew out. I don't believe a word of it. I never saw a man fly yet, and I won't believe it can be done til I see it with my own eyes. John what makes newspaper men lie so horribly !"

ous couple lost their reserve of clothing overboard.

The voyage was commenced on May 23, when the vessel left New Bedford, but by stress of weather she had to put into Chatham, Mass., where she stayed until the 2nd of June, when the sails were again hoisted and the New Bedford left on her perilous voyage, with a fair wind. All went well for the first three days, the wind being south-west and the sea calm. The wind then changed to south-east and it came on foggy for four days and continued foggy up to the time they reached the Banks, seventeen days out. Here a most fortunate thing happened for the navigators. The drogue which they brought with them was found to be of little use, because it was too light. Whilst off the Banks they saw a fleet that in by which, luckily, they were able to secure. Captain Crapo knocked off the iron-hoops and with some canvas made a new drogue, which answered admirably. When it is considered that at one part of the voyage they were obliged to lie to for nearly three days in a great gale of wind it will need no effort to imagine what a fortunate acquisition the new drogue was.

After leaving the Banks, where they lay-to in a gale for fifteen hours, the weather improved and they sailed on till the 21st of June, when another gale was encountered. While laying-to, the New Bedford spoke the steamer Batavia, from which assistance was offered and the opportunity given to be taken on board, which was declined. After this incident they encountered a succession of gales, the only wonder being that they survived to tell the story. During the voyage, which lasted forty-nine days, the rudder broke, but happily there was spare one on board, which was used until the first could be repaired. The sea was running very high, and during all the time which lying down to rest they had to lie in wet clothes, everything being wet. At one time the captain was for seventy hours steering without relief, the weather being so frightful and at another he was eighteen hours consecutively attending to the drogue. Captain Crapo says he could not have stood another fifteen days; indeed he had not slept for seventy hours when he landed. His average amount of sleep whilst coming across was under four hours a day.

One of the many extraordinary things connected with the voyage is that it had to be run by dead reckoning, as the New Bedford was not big enough to carry a chronometer. Only on two occasions could they get their longitude, when speaking the two vessels. Captain Crapo had intended to make for Falmouth, but the wind was against it, as the boat cannot beat on account of its lightness. He bore up for Graves Lake, which he reached about mid-night, and they afterwards came ashore and received the kind attention to be expected from Cornish people. The house they stopped at was invaded by persons eager to shake hands with so brave a couple. The boat was also visited by numbers. Captain Crapo thinks of going on to Falmouth, and afterwards to London and the Paris Exhibition.

A correspondent, who signs himself "A Briton," writes to us to point out that if Mrs. Crapo, who accompanied her husband, and who during the last three days of the voyage was so ill as to be unable to render any assistance, had died in British waters, Mr. Crapo would have been morally guilty of manslaughter. He trusts that Crapo will not be much of in this country, having exposed a woman to such thoughtless hardship and suffering.—From the London Standard July 23rd.

A marine belonging to the frigate Bellerophon, who was accidentally killed on board, was buried at Quebec with naval honors. A stolen Secret.

There used to be, close by Temple Bar, in London, an old chemist's shop. The proprietor of it, in days gone by, enjoyed the monopoly of making citric acid. More favorably circumstanced than other secret manufacturers, his was a process that required no assistance. He employed no workman. Experts came to sample and assay and bottle his products. They never entered the laboratory. The mystic operations by which he grew rich were confined to himself.

One day, having locked the doors and blinded the windows, as usual, of the safety of his secret, our chemist went home to dinner. A chimney-sweep, or a boy disguised as such, wide-awake in chemistry, was on the watch. Following the secret-keeper so far on his way to Charing Cross as to be sure he would not return that day, the sooty philosopher fled rapidly back to Temple Bar, ascended the low buildings dropped down the fire, saw all he wanted, and returned, emerging with him the mystery of making citric acid. The monopoly of the inventor was gone. A few months after and the price of the article was reduced four-fifths. The poor man was heart-broken, and died shortly afterward, ignorant of the trick by which he had been victimized. Like Miss Tabitha Bramble, when informed that the thunder had spoiled two barrels of beer in her cellar, he might have said, "How the thunder should get there, when the cellar was double-locked, I can't comprehend."

At Lancaster, O., the skeletons of a young woman and foetus were found in an untenanted building, formerly occupied by a physician. Two gold rings were on the bones of the woman's hand.

which are becoming most popular are creeping up from the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting, for which they were originally designed, into the pulpit worship of the Sabbath day. They are displacing the hymns and tunes formed to express the more serious and profound and majestic emotions of the soul. Many of the hymns are silly, and many of the tunes are too much like jigs, but half reformed. These popular religious songs, says the Watchman, may be well enough in their proper place, but that place is not the Sabbath service. "Let there be some part of our religious meetings where the soul may be helped by genuine poetry, and by music of such depth and graveness as its more sober and thoughtful mood demand. There are occasions when life seems so great and eternity so overwhelming, that only the organ can interpret our feelings and help us to offer them to God an acceptable sacrifice. The fiddle, and all jingles of the same class, are impertinence. If our taste is not at fault, the Sabbath service, especially the morning service, is an occasion of this sort; and it is but seldom that hymns and tunes most popular in the Sunday-school and the social meeting, can be brought into it without producing discord in most of the souls present."

Information Wanted.

"John," said Mrs. Sanscript to her husband, one evening last week, "I've been reading the paper."

"That's nothing," granted John. "I've seen people before who read newspapers."

"Yes; but there are several things in the paper I can't understand."

"Then don't read 'em."

"Now, here's a column headed 'Base Ball.' What is base ball, John?"

"Don't you know what base ball is? Happy, happy woman, you have not lived in vain."

"Here it says that 'The Hartfords could not collar Cummings' curves.' What under the sun are Cummings' curves?"

"It's the way he delivers the ball."

"Is the ball chained?"

"No, you booby."

"Then how does he deliver it?"

"I mean pitched it."

"Oh! Now here it says Jones muffed a ball after a hard run. What was the ball doing after a hard run?"

"Hain't you better confine your research to the obituary and marriage columns, Mary, with an occasional advertisement thrown in to vary the monotony?"

"Yes; but, John, I want to know! There's Mrs. Racket over the way, who goes to all the base ball games, and comes home to talk me blind about 'fly-balls,' 'base-hits,' 'sky-scrappers,' and all these things. For heaven's sake, John, what is a sky-scraper?"

"Compose yourself, old woman. You are treading on dangerous grounds; you are on slippery rocks, while raging billows roll beneath."

"Mercy on me! What do you mean?"

"I mean, my dear madam, that whenever a woman begins to pry about among three strikes, fair balls, base hits, daisy-cutters, home runs and kindred subjects, she is in danger of being lost."

"Well, I confess I'm completely lost to know what this newspaper means when it says Addy stole a base, while the spectators applauded. Have we come to such a pass that society will applaud a theft? Why wasn't Addy arrested? Now here's Manning put out by Starr, assisted by Carey, and I can't say that he did anything wrong, either. Jemima Christopher! Here it says that Pike flew out. I don't believe a word of it. I never saw a man fly yet, and I won't believe it can be done till I see it with my own eyes. John what makes newspaper men lie so horribly?"

your were ignoring party spirit in the Municipal Elections, we have so Manipulated matters that we now can organize at public expense. The County Council is only another name for our association. The Warden is ours, every Reeve is ours, the Voter's Lists are ours." These are facts that not Reformers alone, but every well-wisher of the public good, in this County ought to ponder over. The policy of ignoring party, in Municipal affairs is undoubtedly commendable, but it may very fairly be questioned whether its continuance is desirable or even tolerable, when one of the parties can make such an unscrupulous use of its exercise by their opponents, and then in such a coarse and vulgar way, boast of their success.

Following up the organization of this so called "Liberal Conservative Association" as we are upon good authority informed a certain trio of the faithful few have, been making peripatetic journeys to each School Section for the purpose of establishing branches of the concern, and in addition to the ordinary subscription of membership to the society, the Free and Independent Electors have been solicited to sign a writing pledging themselves to support as a Candidate at the next Dominion Election for this County, a man of their own selection the intelligent electors will naturally suppose, nothing of the kind. But these worthies, this triumvirate, who care for their great and little breeches pockets the destinies of Lennox, have the temerity, the cheek, and the hardihood to ask electors to give themselves away, to set aside their independence, to stultify their intelligence to nullify the Ballot Act and to sign a cast iron pledge to vote for the Candidate, nominally selected by the association, but really as these their pilgrims or Grim Pills very well know, to be selected by a knot of wire pullers, a set of Political adventurers in Toronto called the United Empire Club.

How do the Electors of Lennox relish the idea of giving away their sacred trust, the Franchise, and putting it in the hands of those who never have done one honest work?

Bad, hopelessly bad, indeed must be the case with this "Liberal Conservative Association" when in addition to its boasting of having a Warden for its President, every Reeve in the County, but Herring, for a Vice-President, the voters lists within its control, the public money substantially available to pay its expenses, it is still necessary for it to stifle free expression, to crush independence of thought, to fetter freedom of action, to curtail liberty of the subject to disfranchise the Electors by tricking them into signing a pledge of sacrifice, surrender, and humiliation. The Hon. Finance Minister must be strong in the affections and judgement, of his constituents when it is found necessary to resort to such dispicable measures for the sake of packing the jury who are to pass upon his merits at the next Election. Desperate cases, require heroic remedies. We know the case of the L. C. A. is a desperate one, but their proposed remedy is the exact reverse of the heroic.

THE WAR NEWS.

It is a difficult matter to get at the truth with regard to the fighting in the Shipka Pass, owing to the contradictory nature of the despatches, and the difficulty in following the movements of the opposing armies in this neighborhood is heightened by the number of small places mentioned which are not to be found even on the best maps attainable. Russian authorities, claim that the Turks are merely wasting their strength in their continued attacks on the defile, and that the defenders have been reinforced, and are now in a better position than ever. It is admitted, that the generalship displayed by the Turks is characterized by unusual brilliancy. The Russians are now preparing for a prolonged campaign, which, will last well into the winter, as bridges which will stand the ice are about to be thrown over the Danube, and large quantities of war material are being collected in the Dobrudscha. The Turks are about to commence operations on the Lower Danube, both by land and water, the land force engaging Zimmerman in the Dobrudscha, and a fleet, under Hobart Paasha, operating in the neighbourhood of the Kilia mouth.

In Asia the Russians have met with two reverses, and it is believed that this will virtually put an end, for this year, to the campaign in that quarter.

The Russian troops at Sistova noted because of the bad provisions and threw 100,000 mouldy loaves into the Danube.

It is officially announced at Berlin that all the Great Powers and Belgium, Holland, Sweden, and Portugal adhere to the German protest against the Turkish cruelties.

Col. Wellesley, after a careful investigation, reports that the accusations against the Russians of cruelties are entirely unfounded. Little quarter, however, is shown by either side in the war.

Canadian Affairs in England.

THE LONDON "TIMES" ON RECIPROCITY.

LONDON, August 25. The Times today has an editorial on the question of reciprocity between Canada and the United States. The Times maintains that the preservation of a customs frontier is a troublesome task that can never be perfectly fulfilled. It is impossible to overhaul every petty act of commerce between the two territories, and if possible the cost would be enormously in excess of the gain. If the two Governments could agree together on the terms upon which the customs line could be abolished it would be a consummation attended with many advantages. England would certainly not stand in the way, but the end might not be so easily reached as may seem. In the former attempts to negotiate a new treaty, the negotiators lost themselves in barren enquiries into the balance of trade and this probably would be the case if fresh negotiations were started. It is probable, after some haggling, the Canadians would consent to the introduction of the manufactures of the States at lower duties than those now levied, but would extend the same reduction on similar commodities to all parts of the world. The extension of such a reduction might be fatal to the negotiations. The fears of the Americans in this respect are probably overstrained. Even if it were true they would not really suffer. The Times does not know whether the idea is entertained that the fishery disputes should be settled by negotiations for a new Reciprocity Treaty. In view of this possibility it suggests that, whatever negotiations are attempted should be confined to the Canadians, the ultimate ratification being left to England. With this all should be reasonably content. The Times remembers the many mishaps arising from the ignorance or forgetfulness of Canadian interests, and will be

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS, HOTELS, DEGRADATION AND CRIME.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 19.—The official report of the investigation of charitable institutions in this State discloses a shocking condition of affairs. Five dazed insane and idiotic people are uncare for. Some of the county almshouses are disgusting dens, filthy and a situation sickening to contemplate.

In the Allegheny Co. alms house, sane and insane are indiscriminately associated without regard to sex. A leprous colored girl had three children born in the alms house.

In Anne, Arundel County, House, the white inmates live in stricted concubinage. One insane has had three illegitimate children in alms house.

The Baltimore County Alms House is fearfully overcrowded. The inmates sleeping in the bath rooms and closets.

Caroline County Alms House, mockery of charity and a nursery of idleness. One woman bore two and other six children in the institution. Colored department was worse than pigsty. In one small room were women, two children, several cats, dogs, and other living things.

In the Cecil County Alms House, sexes so easily mingle that several illegitimate births have occurred. One white woman, herself born in the Alms House gave birth to six children.

The Washington County Alms House is a common nuisance, more sicken and revolting than the others.

The exposure will probably cause a reformation of these horrible barbarities.

A Woman Shot in Her Bed.

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—On Thursday morning about three o'clock Mrs. Su wife of a house carpenter residing Wales, Ont., was shot by some unknown person while sleeping in a bed in lower part of the house. Her husband and a child about ten months old in bed with her at the time, but received no injuries. The bullet took effect in the abdomen. Her husband says window must have been raised and shot fired from the outside. C. Adams, J. P., proceeded to the house shortly after the affair took place questioned the victim in order to ascertain whether she had any idea who committed the deed, but she did not appear to have any, and had no deposit made. She lingered till about five o'clock last night, when death put an end to sufferings.

Hackett's Monument.

The sketch plan of a grand monument in Montreal to the memory of the Thomas Lett Hackett is completed. It will cost as designed about $5,000. It is to be forty-five feet high, on a base twelve feet. The monument is to be Ohio stone. The base will have two bress and a deeply recessed panel, with figure and an open Bible with the inscription:—

THOMAS LETT HACKETT,
Shot in Victoria Square.

And above a richly carved pediment, with the words:—

July 12th, 1877.

Over this rises an octagonal shaft, seven feet high, supporting a canopy of cross. On each side will be polished granite columns.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, AUG. 31st, 1877.

PACKING THE JURY.

For the last month or two, the Tories have been making a flourish of trumpets over the formation of a Liberal Conservative Association in this County. Meetings have been held with this object in view, and the gatherings for Municipal purposes have been utilized in the same way. Members of the County Council while in town as Councillors, have not thought it unbecoming to take advantage of their coming together for the purpose of promoting without expense to the faithful of their own party, the formation of such an association. "Liberal" indeed, in one sense is the proper term for their Association. To utilize a meeting of the County Council for political purposes is doubtless a very thrifty and economical expedient; it costs nothing to advertise the meeting, no postage or stationery required, no sacrifice of time or expense by the delegates, their per diem and mileage is all paid by the County, and most gratifying of all, the Reformers must pay their proportion of it, but, when we are told that men in the public service, and whose time ought to be that of their Constituents without any distinction of party, have devoted that time or any portion of it to the forming and elaborating of a Political Association, hostile to the interests and cherished aspirations of a majority of their Constituents, we begin to understand that the term "Liberal" in the name of their Association is to be taken in a Pickwickian, a truly Conservative sense, and may mean "liberal" in the use of public money for party purposes. The bad taste, and the reprehensible tactics evinced in thus palming themselves off as men who were prepared and competent to perform the duty of County Councillor without "partiality fear favor or affection" the next day after they had spent the previous evening in plotting and planning how they might spoil the Egyptians, or

Bad, hopelessly bad, indeed must be the case with this "Liberal Conservative Association" when in addition to its boasting of having a Warden for its President, every Reeve in the County, but Herring, for a Vice-President, the voters lists within its control, the public money substantially available to pay its expenses, it is still necessary for it to stifle free expression, to crush independence of thought, to fetter freedom of action, to curtail liberty of the subject to disfranchise the Electors by tricking them into signing a pledge of sacrifice, surrender, and humiliation. CLOSE OF THE DUNKIN WAR.

The three weeks Dunkin contest in Toronto closed on the 22nd, the dunkinites gave up the contest as hopeless, and the Mayor formally closed the poll, the returns standing as follows:—

Against the Act	4,063
For the Act	2,947

Majority against the Act 1,116

Both parties worked with great determination, but the Antis being better organized, gained steadily day by day. At the commencement, meetings were held every evening, and the speakers were alternately cheered and hissed, in some cases rowdiness was rampant on both sides, and the speakers were denied a hearing, and for these displays, the Dunkinites, were equally responsible with their opponents, and they proved themselves anything but temperate in the bad taste shown in their method of conducting cert in public meetings, which were opened with hymn singing and prayer, and continued amidst rowdiness and an exchange of compliments anything but creditable to the cause.

One great mistake nearly all the Dunkinite speakers made is that they seem to regard all who are opposed to the Act as sympathizers with drunkenness. This is an absurd as well as an unwarranted charge. Intolerant fanaticism of this sort is not creditable to the men who praise it. There are just as good citizens in the country who are opposed to the Dunkin Act as there is to be found among those who urge its adoption.

The "Victory" was celebrated in the evening by an immense torchlight procession, accompanied with music, banners, medals, decorations, &c., some of which were in very bad taste and would have been better omitted. The crowd proceeded to the park and were addressed by several speakers.

The whole proceedings terminated with an exhibition of fire-works. About eleven o'clock the procession partially reformed and went homewards. Owing to the object of the majority of the taverns in the city being closed, there was little intoxication visible in the streets, and the city was almost perfectly quiet by midnight.

British Columbian Indians.

"THE TIMES" ON OUR INDIAN POLICY.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The Times, in an editorial on the British Columbian Indians, says that the Local Government and the entire population of British Columbia are to oppose no further obstacles in the way of the settlement of existing grievances. The Indian policy of the Canadian Government has been eminently prudent, pacific, and humane, and it would be a consummation attended with many advantages. England would certainly not stand in the way, but the end might not be so easily reached as may seem. In the former attempts to negotiate a new treaty, the negotiators lost themselves in barren enquiries into the balance of trade and this probably would be the case if fresh negotiations were started. In view of this possibility it suggests that, whatever negotiations are attempted should be confined to the Canadians, the ultimate ratification being left to England. With this all should be reasonably content. The Times remembers the many mishaps arising from the ignorance or forgetfulness of Canadian interests, and will be glad if it can be persuaded that the suspension of the Reciprocity Treaty would be the last of them.—Globe.

A Brave and Clever Feat.

On Saturday afternoon the 17th inst., the New York train, which leaves Bonaventure station Montreal at three o'clock, had run about a mile, when a sudden whistle of down brakes caused a number of the passengers to run to the platforms where, by leaning from the steps, they could see the track for some distance before the engine. Not very far in front of the train, a child, apparently about four years of age, was standing on the track, and as the whistle sounded he threw his little arms into the air, but did not move from the spot where he was standing, with a leg on each side of the rail. The brakes were put on with all force, but with the momentum of ten passenger cars it was impossible to stop the train. All who saw it shuddered, expecting to see the little fellow mangled in a moment, for it appeared as though nothing could save him. James Labrich, the fireman of the engine, understanding the situation at a glance, quickly got on the outside of the engine and creeping along a small platform by the side reached the little fellow, who remained in the same position. Then stooping down he put out one foot before the engine and with remarkable skill threw the little boy on his back from the track and the train went on for some distance before being stopped. A crowd of the passengers then ran out expecting to see the mutilated body of the child, but saw him borne home to his family harmed only by the shock which saved him.

Hackett's Monument.

The sketch plan of a grand monument in Montreal to the memory of the Thomas Lett Hackett is completed. It will cost as designed about $5,000. It is to be forty-five feet high, on a base twelve feet. The monument is to be Ohio stone. The base will have two tress and a deeply recessed panel, with figure and an open Bible with the inscription:—

THOMAS LETT HACKETT,
Shot in Victoria Square.

And above a richly carved pediment, with the words:—

July 12th, 1877.

Over this rises an octagonal shaft, seven feet high, supporting a canopy of cross. On each side will be polished granite columns.

Suicide.

AN UNFORTUNATE GIRL POISONS HERSELF.

MONTREAL, Aug. 28.—An inquest held on the body of Mary Barnard, servant who died yesterday from poison. The girl stated that she had taken arsenic to alleviate the pain caused by a boil. From a post mortem examination that took place it was found that she was innocent. She had expressed a wish another servant several times that were dead. The doctors could not find the cause of poison, because an analysis of the stomach had not been made. The verdict was, "Died of acute nervous prostration."

Canadian Cattle In England.

Two of the leading papers of England London Times and London Daily Telegraph, call special attention to the value of Canada live cattle, and that it matter of congratulation to the British public that the trade has been opened all classes, from the highest to the lowest speak with feeling, for, as they remark this new trade had not been opened what would have been the price of beef. By special command one of the Canadian steers was exhibited to the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal household. So that with all respect to Mr. Goldwin Smith, white also Great Britain may be ignorant of regard to the great Dominion, they know beyond a doubt that we can of our abundance show and sell cattle after traveling 3,000 miles in as good a condition comes from any part of the world. A no matter what opposition may be brought against the trade by the grail owners of England, it is destined flourish, for the manufacturing cent must be supplied with beef.

The Steamship of Aug. 10th inst.:—Dominion Line steamer Memphis arrived in the Mercury yesterday with 2 sheep and 215 head of cattle, and horses. This is the largest number sheep ever brought by one steamer from America. The Mississippi, of the same line, sailed yesterday for Canada. The former part of Lord Walsingham's flock information has been received at Liverpool from the Admiralty, stating that cattle from Canada will not be slaughtered upon arrival, there being no cat disease in that country.

New Monopoly in Telegraphing.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—President Orth of the Western Union Company, says that agreement with the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company leaves each its distinctive organization, but the two are to be pooled, the Western Union have 87 per cent., and the Atlantic a Pacific 12 per cent. There is to be rivalry between this and the first of September. The ground will be looked over by the parties in their interest, and where there are two offices in one place one will be abolished, and other measures taken which may be consistent with economy and good service. It is probable that the question of tariff will be reviewed, and in some cases necessary advances, in others possible reduction made.

PACKING THE JURY.

For the last month or two, the Tories have been making a flourish of Trumpets over the formation of a Liberal Conservative Association in this County. Meetings have been held with this object in view, and the gatherings for Municipal purposes have been utilized in the same way. Members of the County Council while in town as Councillors, have not thought it unbecoming to take advantage of their coming together for the purpose of promoting without expense to the faithful of their own party, the formation of such an association. "Liberal" indeed, in one sense is the proper term for their Association. To utilize a meeting of the County Council for political purposes is doubtless a very thrifty and economical expedient; it costs nothing to advertise the meeting, no postage or stationery required, no sacrifice of time or expense by the delegates, their per diem and mileage is all paid by the County, and most gratifying of all, the Reformers must pay their proportion of it, but, when we are told that men in the public service, and whose time ought to be that of their Constituents without any distinction of party, have devoted that time or any portion of it to the forming and elaborating of a Political Association, hostile to the interests and cherished aspirations of a majority of their Constituents, we begin to understand that the term "Liberal" in the name of their Association is to be taken in a Pickwickian, a truly Conservative sense, and may mean "liberal" in the use of public money for party purposes. The bad taste, and the reprehensible tactics evinced in thus palming themselves off as men who were prepared and competent to perform the duty of County Councillors without "partiality fear favor or affection" the next day after they had spent the previous evening in plotting and planning how they might spoil the Egyptians, or in other words, how they could elevate their party and defeat the Reformers, is too palpable for any sort of mitigation or defence.

In illustration of our remarks it is only necessary to mention that after its pretended formation, in the County, their Organ, vulgarly boasted that the Association had for its President the Warden of the County, and for Vice-Presidents, the Reeve of every Municipality, in the County, except Napanee. Of course, under these circumstances, with a Warden for President, and the Reeve of each Municipality for Vice-President, the little matter of the Voter's Lists, which is the special care of such an association, is pretty sure of being made all right. Little danger now, of the Grits getting any names on the Lists, that by Hook or Crook could be kept off! The really thoughtful men of both parties have been struggling for some years past, to banish the baneful spirit of party from Municipal affairs, but here, after all the struggle and sacrifice of the sterling men, the Reformers are in an exasperating and brutal manner by the Tories of to-day told, in effect: "We have formed an Association at your expense in part, while mination, but the Antis being better organized, gained steadily day by day. At the commencement, meetings were held every evening, and the speakers were alternately cheered and hussed, in some cases rowdiness was rampant on both sides, and the speakers were denied a hearing, and for these displays, the Dunkinits, were equally responsible with their opponents, and they proved themselves any thing but temperate in the bad taste shown in their method of conducting even in public meetings, which were opened with hymn singing and prayer, and continued amidst rowdiness and an exchange of compliments anything but creditable to the cause.

Some great mistake nearly all the Dunkinite speakers made is that they seem to regard all who are opposed to the Antis sympathizers with drunkenness. This is as absurd as well as an unwarranted charge. Intolerant fanaticism of this sort is not creditable to the men who praise it. There are just as good citizens in the country who are opposed to the Dunkin Act as are to be found among the Antis who urge its adoption.

The Victory was celebrated in the evening, by an immense torchlight procession, accompanied with music, banners, medals, decorations, &c., some of which were in very bad taste, and would have been better omitted. The crowd proceeded to the park and were addressed by several speakers.

The whole proceedings terminated with an exhibition of fire-works. About eleven o'clock the procession partially reformed and went homewards. Owing to the fact of the majority of the taverns in town being closed, there was little intoxication visible in the streets, and the evening was almost perfectly quiet by midnight.

British Columbian Indians.

THE "TIMES" ON OUR INDIAN POLICY.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The Times, in an editorial on the British Columbian Indians, says that the Local Government and the white population of British Columbia ought to oppose no further obstacles in the way of the settlement of existing grievances. The Indian policy of the Canadian Government has been eminently prudent, pacific, and humane, and has been eminently justified by the results. Canada has hitherto been justly proud of the peace maintained with the aboriginal tribes. Her triumphs have been won by equity and kindness. Any delay in settling the difficulties in British Columbia would be supremely dangerous to the credit and tranquillity of the Dominion.

Unsafe Ships.

A return has been issued of all ships owned by the Board of Trade, (Eng.), and all officers, to be provisionally detained as unsafe from the 1st of October, 1876, to the 30th June last. There were 103 vessels altogether reported as defective in the hull, equipments, or machinery, five of which were iron steamships, one a wooden steamship, and ninety-four were sailing ships. On examination 101 of the ships were found unsafe, two safe, and in the case of one of the survey is still pending. In the case of eighty-two ships the reports came from the Government officers, in eighteen from the crews, and in four from other persons. The number of ships detained for overloading, or improper loading was twenty-seven, of which twenty-two were iron steamships and four wooden sailing ships, while one was an iron sailing ship. They were all unsafe. The ships were reported defective in twenty-six instances by the Government officers, and in one case by the crew.

The Countess of Dufferin.

SHE LEAVES NEW YORK IN THE NIGHT, AND HER CREDITORS IN THE LUNCH.

The Canadian yacht Countess of Dufferin, which has been a bone of contention among her owners and against whom there were many executions, quietly slipped her cables at her moorings in the East river off 22d street, New York, Wednesday night 15th inst., and stole away to sea.

The sheriff of Richmond county had left for the night on the promise of Major Gifford, her principal owner, to settle all bills the next day in Wall street. The Star says the major left none too early, as a delay of twenty-four hours would have brought two more sheriffs with claims. The Dufferin has been the victim of adverse circumstances, but the last move is unjustifiable and will have a tendency to lower the standing of Major Gifford, who has been regarded as a representative Canadian yachtsman. [The Canadian yacht Countess of Dufferin has since arrived at Halifax from New York.]

New Monopoly in Telegraphing.

NEW YORK Aug. 21.—President Orth of the Western Union Company, says that agreement with the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company leaves each its distinctive organization, but the wires are to be pooled, the Western Union have 87½ per cent., and the Atlantic a Pacific 12½ per cent. There is to be rivalry between this and the first of September. The Western Union this afternoon possession of 72,500 shares of Atlantic and Pacific stock—giving them control of the latter company. Several large fortunes made there within the past week. Western Union stock speculators. Francis Hincks, Theodore Hart, and Henry Judah cleared from fifty to a hundred thousand dollars each.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS IN SCOTLAND. The outlook in the coal and iron trade in Scotland is reported as far from encouraging, and a winter of severe cold and suffering is anticipated. The iron masters in the west of Scotland have solved to reduce their productions about one-third the usual supply, reason for this step being alleged to be the prolonged dullness of trade and very low prices at which pig iron is being sold. The practical import of this is that about one-third of all the furnaces in Scotland will be stopped. The total number of furnaces in that country is 157. The number when reduced will be 78 in blast; the smallest number, operation for at least thirty-two years. So long, remarks the Scottish American Journal, as trade continues in the same condition as at present, it will only be possible to maintain prices by cutting down production to the lowest possible point.

The harvest is progressing in Scotland with the most satisfactory results.

THE WAR NEWS.

It is a difficult matter to get at the truth with regard to the fighting in the Shipka Pass, owing to the contradictory nature of the despatches, and the difficulty in following the movements of the opposing armies in this neighborhood is heightened by the number of small places mentioned which are not to be found even on the best maps attainable. Russian authorities, claim that the Turks are merely wasting their strength in their continued attacks on the defile, and that the defenders have been reinforced. and are now in a better position than ever. It is admitted, that the generalship displayed by the Turks is characterized by unusual brilliancy. The Russians are now preparing for a prolonged campaign, which, will last well into the winter, as bridges which will stand the ice are about to be thrown over the Danube, and large quantities of war material are being collected in the Dobrudscha. The Turks are about to commence operations on the Lower Danube, both by land and water, the land force engaging Zimmerman in the Dobrudscha, and a fleet, under Hobart Pasha, operating in the neighbourhood of the Kilia mouth.

In Asia the Russians have met with two reverses, and it is believed that this will virtually put an end, for this year, to the campaign in that quarter.

The Russian troops at Sistova noted because of the bad provisions and threw 100,000 mouldy loaves into the Danube.

It is officially announced at Berlin that all the Great Powers and Belgium, Holland, Sweden, and Portugal adhere to the German protest against the Turkish cruelties.

Col. Wellesley, after a careful investigation, reports that the accusations against the Russians of cruelties are entirely unfounded. Little quarter, however, is shown by either side in the war.

Canadian Affairs in England.

THE LONDON "TIMES" ON RECIPROCITY.

LONDON, August 25. The Times today has an editorial on the question of reciprocity between Canada and the United States. The Times maintains that the preservation of a customs frontier is a troublesome task that can never be perfectly fulfilled. It is impossible to overhaul every petty act of commerce between the two territories, and if possible the cost would be enormously in excess of the gain. If the two Governments could agree together on the terms upon which the customs line could be abolished it would be a consummation attended with many advantages. England would certainly not stand in the way, but the end might not be so easily reached as may seem. In the former attempts to negotiate a new treaty, the negotiators lost themselves in barren enquiries into the balance of trade and this probably would be the case if fresh negotiations were started. It is probable, after some haggling, the Canadians would consent to the introduction of the manufactures of the States at lower duties than those now levied, but would extend the same reduction on similar commodities to all parts of the world. The extension of such a reduction might be fatal to the negotiations. The fears of the Americans in this respect are probably overstrained. Even if it were true they would not really suffer. The Times does not know whether the idea is entertained that the fishery disputes should be settled by negotiations for a new Reciprocity

Shocking Disclosures in Maryland.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS, HOTBEDS OF DEGRADATION AND CRIME.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 19.—The official report of the investigation of charitable institutions in this State discloses a shocking condition of affairs. Five hundred insane and idiotic people are utterly uncared for. Some of the county alms houses are disgusting dens, filth and prostitution sickening to contemplate.

In the Allegheny Co. alms house the sane and insane are indiscriminately associated without regard to sex. An epileptic colored girl had three children, two born in the alms house.

In Anne, Arundel County, Alms House, the white inmates live in unrestricted concubinage. One insane woman has had three illegitimate children in the alms house.

The Baltimore County Alms House is fearfully overcrowded. The inmates are sleeping in the bath rooms and water closets.

Caroline County Alms House is a mockery of charity and a nursery of pollution. One woman bore two and another six children in the institution. The colored department was worse than a pigsty. In one small room were five women, two children, several cats and dogs, and other living things.

In the Cecil County Alms House, the sexes so easily mingle that several illegitimate births have occurred. One idiotic woman, herself born in the Alms House, gave birth to six children.

The Washington County Alms House is a common nuisance, more sickening and revolting than the others.

The exposure will probably cause a reformation of these horrible barbarities.

A Woman Shot in Her Bed.

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—On Thursday morning about three o'clock Mrs. Smith, wife of a house carpenter residing in Wales, Ont., was shot by some unknown person while sleeping in a bed in the lower part of the house. Her husband and a child about ten months old were in bed with her at the time, but received no injuries. The bullet took effect in the abdomen. Her husband says the window must have been raised and the shot fired from the outside. On Adams, J. P., proceeded to the house shortly after the affair took place and questioned the victim in order to ascertain whether she had any idea who committed the deed, but she did not appear to have any, and had no disposition to make. She lingered till about five o'clock last night, when death put an end to her sufferings.

CONSIDERATION OF AMERICAN SHIPPING INTERESTS.—DELEGATION FROM THE DOMINION BOARD.—ADOPTION OF RESOLUTIONS IN FAVOR OF RECIPROCITY.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 22.

The National Board of Trade of the United States, now in session at Milwaukee, has passed resolutions in favour of the repeal of the navigation laws, prohibiting registration under the American flag to foreign vessels, the property of American shipowners, and in favour of a uniform table of weights, the substitution of specific for ad valorem duties, and the abolition of the excessive bonds required under the Direct Importation Act.

The committee appointed last year to consider the question of reciprocity with Canada reported a series of resolutions strongly recommending the revival of the Reciprocity Treaty, and the adoption of measures for the furtherance of that object. The resolutions were carried with only six votes in the negative.

Mr. White, of Montreal, and Mr. Adam Brown, of Hamilton, President of the Dominion Board of Trade, delivered able addresses in favour of reciprocity.

A Man Shot By An Injured Husband.

MONTREAL, Aug. 25.—Robert Colby, wood surveyor and explorer, on last Tuesday afternoon went to the house of Wm. H. Jackman, about a mile and a half from Windsor Mills, P. Q., and remained all night, drinking heavily with Jackman. He returned to the house again about nine in the morning and after demanding and being given some dinner by Mrs. Jackman, attempted a criminal assault upon her while her husband, who is said to be in feeble health, was lying down in another room. Jackman, being called to his wife's assistance, took down a loaded gun and ordered Colby out of the house, threatening to shoot him. The latter rushed at Jackman, who then deliberately shot him through the neck, killing him instantly. Coroners Woodward held an inquest the same afternoon, the result of which was a verdict of death by a shot from a gun wilfully fired by Wm. H. Jackman. Colby's wife is residing in New Hampshire.

THE STRIKE LOSSES.—The tax-payers of Alleghany County, Pennsylvania, will have to pay the losses ($5,000,000) caused by the rioters in Pittsburgh. This is Pennsylvania, law, and the same law exists in New York. In 1863, at the time of the draft riot, New York City had to pay millions of dollars for damages to property. In 1844 the city of Philadelphia had to pay all the losses amounting to millions, caused by what is called the Native American riot. The New York Tribune office was gutted in 1863. The city paid Horace Greeley several thousand dollars damages.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS IN SCOTLAND.—The outlook in the coal and iron trades in Scotland is reported as far from encouraging, and a winter of severe trial and suffering is anticipated. The ironmasters in the west of Scotland have resolved to reduce their productions by about one-third the usual supply, the reason for this step being alleged to be the prolonged dullness of trade and the very low prices at which pig-iron is being sold. The practical import of this will be that about one-third of all the furnaces in Scotland will be stopped. The total number of furnaces in that country is 157. The number when reduced will be 75 in blast; the smallest number in operation for at least thirty-two years. So long, remarks the Scottish American Journal, as trade continues in the same condition as at present, it will only be possible to maintain prices by cutting down production to the lowest possible point.

The harvest is progressing in Manitoba with the most satisfactory results.

know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common Sore Throat. One bottle has cured Bronchitis. Fifty cents worth has cured an Old Standing Cough. One or two bottles cures colds, Croup, and Kidney Troubles. Six to eight applications cure ANY CASE OF AGGRAVATED NIPPLES OR INFLAMED BREAST. One bottle has cured LAMBS BACK of years' standing. Daniel Plunk, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa., says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a WONDERFUL CURE of a CROOKED LIMB, by six applications." Another who has had ASHOMA for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Rufus Robinson, of Nantua, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your ELECTRIC OIL restored the voice where the persons had not spoken above a whisper in FIVE YEARS." R. V. L. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your ELECTRIC OIL cured me of Bronchitis in one week."

It is composed of SIX OF THE BEST OILS THAT ARE KNOWN. It is good for internal as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense.

Beware of Imitations.—Ask for Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. See that the signature of S. N. Thomas is on the wrapper, and the name of Northrop and Lyman are blown in the bottle, and "Fido" is on the label by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cents. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the subject of permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps. The celebrated author of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and perfect, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Treatise should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

REGISTRATION OF AMERICAN SHIPPING INTERESTS.—DELEGATION FROM THE NATIONAL BOARD.—ADOPTION OF RESOLUTIONS IN FAVOR OF RECIPROCITY.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 22.

National Board of Trade of the United States, now in session at Milwaukee, has passed resolutions in favour of repeal of the navigation laws, providing registration under the American flag for foreign vessels, the property of American shipowners, and in favour of a modification of weights, the substitution of ad valorem duties, and the repeal of the excessive bonds required by the Direct Importation Act.

A committee appointed last year to consider the question of reciprocity with Canada reported a series of resolutions recommending the revival of the Reciprocity Treaty, and the adoption of measures for the furtherance of that object. The resolutions were carried with six votes in the negative.

White, of Montreal, and Mr. Brown, of Hamilton, President of the Dominion Board of Trade, delivered addresses in favour of reciprocity.

Man Shot By An Injured Hus-Band.

MONTREAL, Aug. 25.—Robert Colby, a surveyor and explorer, on last Monday afternoon went to the house of H. Jackman, about a mile, and a son Windsor Mills, P. Q., and remained all night, drinking heavily with him. He returned to the house about nine in the morning and demanding and being given some money by Mrs. Jackman, attempted a assault upon her while her husband who is said to be in feeble health, lying down in another room. Jackman being called to his wife's assistance, drew a loaded gun and ordered him out of the house, threatening to kill him. The latter rushed at Jackman who then deliberately shot him in the neck, killing him instantly. Judge Woodward held an inquest the afternoon, the result of which was a verdict of death by a shot from a gun fired by Wm. H. Jackman. His wife is residing in New Hampshire.

STRIKE LOSSES.—The tax-payers of Alleghany County, Pennsylvania, will have to pay the losses ($5,000,000) caused by the rioters in Pittsburgh. This is the law in Pennsylvania, and the same law exists in New York. In 1863, at the time of the draft riot, New York City had to pay millions of dollars for damages to property. In 1844 the city of Philadelphia had to pay all the losses amounting to millions, caused by what is called the American riot. The New York City office was gutted in 1863. The old Horace Greeley several thousand dollars damages.

THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

I have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Es- (the radical and permanent cure) (with- out the aid of Narcotics) Debility, Mental and an incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, resulting from excesses. Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or postage stamps. The celebrated author of this admirable Es- sentialy demonstrates, from thirty years' suc- cessful practice, that alarming cases, once radically cured without the dangerous internal medicine or the application of caustic, pointing out the mode of cure at once for the sufferer, by means of which sufferer, no matter what his condition may cure himself cheaply, privately and rad- ically.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, AUGUST 31st 1877.

To All Concerned.

Owing to the extremely dull month we have just passed through, we are behind in our payments, and are compelled to render accounts on 1st of September instead of October as usual, and we hope our customers will respond cheerfully. And to those who have not paid their last year's accounts and spent their money elsewhere this summer, we take this mode of notifying them that if they do not pay up by 1st of September, their accounts shall be placed in Court for collection. We intend sending out accounts to parties whose names appear in our books, and shall expect a settlement in full from all.

ROSE & FRALICK.

School Re opening.

The Public and High Schools will resume work on Monday next, 3rd September.

Illegal Whiskey.

On Monday, John Watson of Amherst Island and John Vagar of Napanee were each fined $20, and costs for illegal liquor selling. George Leary in default of the fine ($20) was sent up for one month.

Quebec Provincial Exhibition.

The Provincial Exhibition of the Province of Quebec for 1877, open to the world, will take place on the 18th, 20th, 21st September, at the city of Quebec. Entries for live stock must be made on or before Saturday, the 1st September, and for other articles in the industrial department on or before Saturday, the 8th September. Mr. Leclerc, the Secretary, Montreal, will gladly answer any inquiries on the subjects.

Re-painting.

Messrs. Diamond & Co., are taking advantage of a few days spare time to repaint the W. W. Grant, and Captain Bartley, handles the brush with as much facility as he would guide the tiller. Boat owners generally, should keep their crafts well painted and in good repair. A little brush work done between times, is an excellent advertising dodge, and serves to inspire confidence in a cautious shipper, who might otherwise, pass by a staunch vessel which had a dilapidated appearance.

Harvest Home Dinner—Wilton.

A Harvest Home Dinner, under the auspices of the C. M. Church, on the Wilton Circuit, will be held D. V., on Thursday, 13th September next, at the C. M. Church in Wilton, dinner to be served at 12 o'clock, sharp. The following speakers and others, are expected to address the meeting. Rev. Wm. Briden, Odessa; Rev. A. McCann, Newburgh; Rev. L. Gibson, Bath. Music by the Violet and Wilton choirs. Tickets, single 40 cts., double 75 cts.

Looking After us.

Dr. Martin Stevens has lately been visiting Napanee and vicinity, he is writing a book to be entitled, "What the American Traveller has Seen." He was a guest of the Brisco House, and our hospitable Mayor showed him around. During his sojourn, he was so favourably impressed with our town and townspeople that we shall certainly expect to receive 'honourable mention'—if nothing more—in his forthcoming work. The Doctor intends giving an impartial view of every place he visits. He left for the Thousand Islands and the St. Lawrence.

Annual Matches I. & A. K. A.

The Lennox and Addington Rifle Association will have its annual matches at Bath on Wednesday, 5th September, and following days. Five matches are

New Attraction.

Mr. Jno. Downey, with his usual enterprise, has added a 'carpet exhibitor' to his Dry goods establishment, it enables a customer to see the 'effect,' and how a carpet will look on a room before purchasing.

Pic-nic—Camden.

The Roman Catholics of Camden announce a pic-nic at Evans' Grove, on September 6th. Messrs. Jas. Haydon and S. Shibley will be placed in competition for a silver pitcher. Games, dancing, music, and refreshments! Admission 25 cents.

Napanee Gas Company.

A general meeting of the stock holders of the Napanee Gas Company was held in the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, 21st inst., for the purpose of considering the financial condition of the gas enterprise. A Report of the liabilities assets, receipts and expenditure of the Company, was read. Remarks upon the financial standing of the Company were made by several members. Moved by Judge Wilkison, sec. by Mr. F. W. Smith, that a Committee, composed of Messrs. Herring McNeil, Morden, and Douglas, be appointed to confer with the Canada Gas Lighting Co. of Montreal, and report at an adjourned meeting.

Removed.

The general agent of the Travelers Life and Accident Ins. Co. Mr. Wm. Hanson, has been promoted to the Company's Head Office in Toronto. Mr. H. was well adapted for his position while in Napanee, and any reckless fellow on a shaky ladder, or other man trap, was sure to find the indefatigable Hanson, smilingly waiting for him on terra firma, and ever ready to expatiate on the perils of all things earthly &c., &c., all of which seems to have been fully appreciated by the Co., to whom Mr. H., was no doubt, financially a success. We wish him well in his new field. Mr. E. Lapum succeeds him in Napanee.

Board of Education.

At a special meeting on the 23rd, the application of Mr. A. C. Osborne, Dunville, for the Headmastership of the Model School, was accepted at a salary of $650. Five applicants tendered, two of whom had not the necessary qualifications, the salaries asked were 650, 700, 700, 800, and $1,000. A competent architect is to examine the spire of the West ward building and report. The earth taken out of the tank in the West ward is to be used to level the grounds around the building. The rate for non-residents attending the Public School is to be 50 cents per month in advance, and that such pupils are admitted by the teachers only on presentation of the Secretary's certificate that the rate has been paid.

Personal.

Capt Hooper has gone to Toronto to compete in the Provincial rifle matches. Miss. Phelan, Messrs. Downey's head milliners, is studying the latest styles in a large Montreal house. She returns in time for the fall season.

The following applicants, from Napanee, have been admitted as barristers at the Law Society's Examination in Toronto, E. B. Stone, J. H. Madden, T. J. Blackstock and J. Gordon.

Mr. James Blair, so long and favorably known as a first-class tailor and cutter, has opened for himself, over Coxall & Paisleys—See ad.

Expressions.

The Picton Cricket Club beat Napanee on Picton ground Wednesday.

That band of gypsies are again 'doing' the town and speculating in horse flesh, 800 patronized the P. B's., excursion, $150, were cleared by the 'Boys'. Jno. O'Brien's expenses in Napanee were $200 and he cleared $1500.

Excise.

During the present month there have been 37 brls. or 1200.83 pf. gals. Spirits entered for Warehouse. There have been Ex-warehoused 37 brls. or 1200.83 pf. gals. Spirits the duty collected thereon amounting to $1080.76, duty collected on tobacco and cigars was $35.00, making the total duty collected for August $1115.76.
